Irritable or Uncontrollable Bladder

There are several medical terms for this condition which occurs most commonly in children and older persons. In the medical literature it is referred to as urge incontinence. The condition also is known as an irritable, uncontrollable, or unstable bladder. It is described as a sudden urge to urinate and possibly passing a small amount of urine before getting to the bathroom. The list of possible causes include urinary tract infection, inflammation of bladder muscles, using medicines that cause the pooling or retention of urine, or a weakening of pelvic-floor muscles in the lower abdomen. These are the muscles that close off the top of the urethra (the channel through which urine is passed). If such muscles are weakened, pressure on them (such as from coughing, laughing, or lifting) may cause leakage.

According to a recent issue of the medical journal Geriatrics, medications and behavioral therapy are the primary treatments for uncontrollable bladder. Oxybutynin and dicyclomine are prescription medicines that act directly to help relax spastic or irritable bladder muscles. Other prescription medicines mentioned in the article include imipramine, propantheline, and flavoxate. Behavioral therapies may include urination habit training, bladder retraining, biofeedback, and electrical stimulation (a promising therapy that enhances contraction of pelvic-floor muscles).
