Chamber Chatter

By Claudia Hughes, Chamber Manager

"Keeping Small Town USA On The Map" is an article that surfaced at a recent Heppner Coordinating Council meeting. From this article, one of the bits of advice that might be valuable to Heppner was 'Small Town Staying Power'. Two sociologists, Cornelia and Jan Flora, say rural communities do well when they:

1. Accept controversy as normal and talk about it in the newspaper;
2. Keep personalities out of politics;
3. Cheer for school academics as much as athletics;
4. Tax themselves to maintain public services;
5. Have some cash left to invest in town projects;
6. Have the vision to see beyond city limits;
7. Have the confidence to share leadership with one another and with newcomers.

And to the above I would add these three:

8. Become diversified to create additional jobs, rather than depend on one key industry;
9. Be open to new ideas and gather input from young people just starting out;
10. Remember to celebrate victories and take time to laugh.

So, how do you think we rate? Give each of the above a score between one and 10. Do we come close to 100 percent? You're all challenged to put on your creative thinking caps and throw out as many ideas as possible on item eight. What can we manufacture right here in Heppner that will create more jobs, draw people to us, and help our economy? Drop your ideas in the mail: My Idea, PO Box 1232, Heppner, 97836.

"Everything came up roses" last Wednesday, April 6. The chamber of commerce will realize approximately $1,494 for chamber projects.

Rollie Marshall was high rose seller this year, selling 56 dozen; while Betty Gray came in second selling 30 dozen in lone.

Marshall and John Edmundson transported 250 dozen roses to Heppner and distributed them with the help of volunteers, Marcia DeBo, Norma French and chamber president Steve Dickenson. Central Market provided the cooler for distribution.

The cooperation of the Pendleton Rotary Club made the non-dues income project possible for Heppner Chamber. "Folks here had a bargain," says chamber manager Claudia Hughes, "as roses sold for $17 per dozen in Pendleton and Hermiston."
