Museum to host Blacks in the West of the "pioneers" of the 19th century West are almost exclusively Caucasian, African Americans played an important role in western expansion. Millner's presentation explores why the West attracted Blacks and the impact their presence had upon the westward movement. Focusing upon the Buffalo soldiers, Black cavalry and infantry units who came west after the Civil War, the program demonstrates their critical role in the major events of western development.

Darrell Millner is chair of the Black Studies Department at Portland State University and has done extensive research on the history of African Americans in Oregon and in the Northwest.
