CSEPP warning sirens will be silent

Emergency Management officials in Morrow and Umatilla Counties say nearly all testing of an emergency warning system will be silent. When the warning system is operational next year, county dispatch centers will perform silent siren tests daily. Two full volume siren tests will be performed each year. The only other time the public will hear the sirens is during an emergency.

In a full volume test, the sirens will play a Westminster Chimes test tone. The public will be given ample notice before this full volume testing occurs.

Even at full volume, the twice-a-year test tones will be below state and federal noise limits, say officials. The siren manufacturer assures Emergency Management officials that the sirens will not cause hearing loss and will not break windows.

Forty-two emergency warning sirens will be installed near the Umatilla Army Depot, in the cities of Boardman, Irrigon, Umatilla, Hermiston, Stanfield and Echo. During an emergency, the sirens will broadcast a loud warning tone, followed by voice instructions in English and Spanish.

The sirens can be activated for a natural disaster, a hazardous materials transportation accident or a depot accident involving chemical weapons. The sirens can be activated all at once or individually, depending on the size of the area affected by the disaster.

The sirens are part of an alert and notification system that should be operational by summer, 1995. The project is federally funded by the Chemical Stockpile Emergency Preparedness Program, also known as CSEPP. The goal of the CSEP program is to prepare the community for major emergencies, through disaster planning public education, and early warning systems.
