Heppner Ranger District presents Forest Service history film

The Umatilla National Forest is celebrating the centennial of the Forest Service with the showing of the feature-length documentary "The Greatest Good" at 6:30 p.m. on Tuesday, June 14, at the Heppner Ranger District. The public is invited to attend and admission is free.

The two-hour film provides a close examination of the last 100 years of the Forest Service. The film takes the audience on a journey into the heart of a story as compelling as it is uniquely American- a story of courage and tragedy, enormous progress and bitter conflict. The Forest Service centennial film frames the epic story of the struggle to manage a nation's resources amid global change.

This documentary explores sensitive topics such as the delicate balance between preservation and conservation, the need to conserve and the desire for public use, historical paternalism and exclusion of women in the agency, as well as the inherent dangers and controversies of wildland firefighting.

The film attempts to make household names of ecological pioneers alike Aldo Leopold, Bob Marshall, Arthur Carhart and Gifford Pinchot. The film looks first at pre-World War II land management policy under Pinchot and then analyzes the conflicts of the post-war era, spurred by the environment movement of the 1960s. The story of the Forest Service is rich in visual imagery.

RENOVATE OR SELL "AS IS"?
Say you've lived in your home for some 20 or 30 years. You are now ready to retire, sell and move to something smaller. However, something happened in the past 20 or 30 years. Home designs and buyers' tastes have changed, but your kitchen, bathrooms, and perhaps heating and plumbing systems have not. To get full price for your home, you would have to make a major investment and massive renovations or perhaps, sell "as-is" for a lower price?
Before you make that decision, you or your agent should compare the market advantages of selling the home "as-is" versus partially or completely rehabbed.
If you are not in a position financially or don't relish the thought of being inconvenienced, you may actually be in a pretty good selling situation. You may come out money ahead by selling at a lower price for your location after you compare the final selling price against the emotional and dollar cost of improving.
