10th Amendment program put on in Heppner

By David Sykes

What the framers of the constitution intended when the country was formed, is a long way from the power the federal government has today, a constitutional attorney told a group of people in Heppner Sept. 12.

Walla Walla Attorney Andrea Burkhart put on the program concerning the 10th amendment of the US Constitution. The amendment is relatively short and states: "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people." Burkhart said Thomas Jefferson called the amendment the foundation of the constitution.

Burkhart said the tenth amendment restricts the power of the federal government and places the power in the states. "How did the federal government get where it is today?" she asked. "It is important for us to learn as much as we can about our constitution." Burkhart said she and her husband, also an attorney in their law firm have been putting on programs about the 10th amendment to "share our knowledge with people who want to learn," she told the crowd of about 50 people.

She said when the founders of the country declared their independence from Great Britain they believed that people were born free and should be able to structure their society the way they wanted. Burkhart said the rights the founders believed they had were God given and not granted to them by any government. The Constitution was to protect these rights against encroachment by any government. "The founders were under the complete control of King George III. His word was law and the framers had no say in parliament." Burkhart says this is why consent of the governed was very important to the founders. They believed too much power in the hands of one person restricts our freedoms, she said.

Burkhart said when the country was established the role of the federal government was to settle disputes between the states and to protect the country. "The federal government was there to take care of federal issues and to fight the British," she said. "There was a lot of pride in states when the country was founded and they were going to be the primary place laws are to be made," she said.

The program was sponsored by the Willow Creek Tea Party Patriots. Before the program started Michelle Stone of Heppner sang the Star Spangle Banner, stanzas two and four, the two stanzas are the ones not usually sung or heard.

Boardman Quilt Show featured quilter has varied background

The featured quilter at the sixth annual Boardman Quilt Show has had a variety of careers and experiences, which she draws on in her creative projects. Kris Dorran will be available to share her techniques, and original designs with visitors at the Boardman Quilt Show, September 24 and 25. The Quilt Show will be held at the Boardman Sr. Center, 100 Tatone Street, in Boardman. Show hours are 10 a.m. - 4 p.m. Food and beverages will be available, and admission is $3.

Kris Baker. She graduated from Riverside High School in Boardman in 1980, and from OSU in 1985.

Kris attributes her interest in sewing and textile arts to her mother, Mildred Baker. "My mother has always sewn, I don't think I had a 'store bought' dress until I was in the sixth grade. She taught me to sew at a very early age. I sewed mostly clothes and really didn't get into quilting until I was in my thirties. Once I did get into quilting I pretty much stopped making clothes all together."

for a year. She moved on to another aspect of the business world when K-Mart Corporation hired her for their Management program. During the 20 years she was with K-Mart, she managed 11 K-Mart stores in eight states. In 2006, Kris left K-Mart, and moved with her husband, R.B., back to his hometown, Hermiston. She continues to work full time in management and quilts for pleasure.

She shares that she really enjoys making smaller items, table runners, table toppers and wall hangings. "I like the quick gratification that the smaller finished product gives me." Seasonal ones are her favorites and she has been known to make them for almost any and every season. For a wedding present for one of her friends she made a set of 12 table runners, one for every month. For larger projects, Kris really enjoys making the 'scrappy type' of quilts. "My favorite challenge is to make something out of leftovers. My mother never threw anything away and she has passed that trait on to me." Kris likes a challenge and enjoys using computer software programs to make her original designs. "It is very helpful to be able to 'draw' them out in color before cutting into and potentially wasting fabric."

'Thomas Paine' coming to Walla Walla

America's "Thomas Paine" is coming to Walla Walla and anyone who would like more information or to arrange transportation can contact Jack Melligan of Heppner.

Sponsored by the Walla Walla Tea Party, Bob Basso will bring his popular portrayal of Thomas Paine, as seen by millions of YouTube viewers, to the First Assembly of God Church on Saturday, September 25. There will also be other speakers and the program will last from 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Organizers say a $10 donation will be appreciated.

On Friday, Sept. 24 at 3 p.m. at the Walla Walla Community College there will be a program entitled Stopping the Assault on America by Michael Coffman, Ph.D. who is a scientist, activist and author of Rescuing a Broken America. The program is free but donations are appreciated.

Meligan, a member of the Willow Creek Tea Party Patriots, has more information on the programs and his phone number is 676-5805.

BMCC to offer Conversational Spanish Class in Heppner

Blue Mountain Community College will be offering a Conversational Spanish Class in Heppner this fall.

The class is for adults and is geared toward beginners with little to no experience with Spanish. The instructor, Amy Blauer, will focus on correct pronunciation of new words, and work on helping learners build a basic vocabulary set designed to enable the students to communicate in Spanish. Classes will include instruction on common phrases, greetings, days of the week, numbers, question words, pronouns, key verbs, and more.

The eight-week class will take place at Heppner High School on Tuesday evenings from 5:30 to 7 p.m., and will run from October 5 through November 28. The cost is $62.

Anyone interested can register online at www.bluecc.edu or contact Anne Morter for more information at (541) 422-7040.
