

GALE ST -Continued from PAGE ONE

Gale Street is in need of repair to fix multiple potholes.

There may not be enough money to do all 10 streets. "I don't want people to assume all ten are going to be taken care of," Mayor Cody High emphasized. He said they would work on the streets until the money runs out, and it was speculated that actually Gale and Chase streets would "eat up" a good portion of the money.

On the Gale Street project there will not only be new asphalt but also storm drains, sidewalks and a new sewer main. The city will have to pay for the new sewer line on Gale, and it was discussed now would be the time to fix other street's water and sewer lines, while the streets are torn up. "We don't want to put in a new street and then come back and have to dig it up to put in utilities," High said. Barry agreed, "Once you put the mat down (street asphalt) you don't want to cut it because that keeps water out of the base," he explained.

Barry gave an explanation for why so many of the city streets seem to be falling in disrepair all at the same time. He said during the 1980s and early 1990s there was timber being cut and the city was receiving timber receipts and wisely using the money for street repairs. When that money dried up it became more difficult for small Oregon towns to maintain their streets. He said the money that is coming from the state now should help Hepper catch up.

Following is a more complete list of scheduled work (subject to available funds):

1. Gale Street – storm drains, asphalt, sidewalks, sewer main.
2. Chase – Main to Chase
3. Church – Between Gale and Main for curb-gutter drainage.
4. Summit Drive – overlay
5. Willow View – Chip seal, crack sealing from water street to high school
6. South Main – to the bridge patching
7. Morgan – to top of hill with sidewalks to Riverside
8. Willow – Gale to Main St.
9. Jones St

In other business the council heard from Morrow County Planner Carla McLane who asked if the city would be willing to help fund a survey to catalog the available land for housing construction, and also look at the city's building codes to make sure they are "user friendly." McLane said other communities in the county are helping financially and the study would be county wide.

McLane said there is a housing shortage all across south county and the inventory and study may help ease the housing pinch. She pointed out the Willow Creek Valley Economic Development Group's efforts to develop more housing. WCVEDG president David Sykes told the council the group was getting close to moving forward on a duplex project that could be built in Heppner. Land has been made available, surveying done and grant money from the Columbia River Enterprise Zone accumulated to build several duplexes. Sykes told the council that he and WCVEDG Executive Director Sheryll Bates have also met with representative from the State of Oregon to discuss its involvement in the housing project. The state apparently recognizes a state-wide problem of work force (not low income) rental unit shortage in rural communities, and is reaching out to find pilot projects to assist with. WCVEDG's project is now under consideration to be used as one of the pilot projects, so there may be some state assistance available. Sykes said looking into the future, if the current duplex project is successful WCVEDG may try to replicate the process and develop additional rental housing units. He said the inventory land study would be valuable in this effort by identifying possible building sites, and urged the council to support McLane's efforts.

McLane said the entire land inventory study would cost $45,000 and that the county, cities of Irrigon, Boardman and Ione have already committed funding. The council said it would discuss the plan and make a decision later.

In other reports the council heard from Fire Chief Rusty Estes who gave the following yearly totals of activity in 2017:

31 motor vehicle accidents, 32 times secured the helicopter landing zone, 13 wildland fires, four flue fires, six structure fires, 14 ambulance assistance, nine false alarms, two rescues, one haystack fire, one explosion, and four vehicle fires. They also gave assistance four times to Ione Fire Department, one each to Gilliam County, Hermiston and Lexington. He reported in total there were 127 fire department page outs in 2017.
