"The Linotype Way is the Way that Wins."

Entered as second-class matter March 3, 1911, at the post office at Gresham, Oregon, under the act of March 3, 1879.

GRANGES WILL HELP THE FAIR.

The Beaver State Herald inadvertently said last week in an article on the Fair Directors meeting that nothing had been heard from any of the granges about exhibits. That the granges were feeling pretty sore this year and might take very little interest in the fair. That many of the grangers felt that they should retaliate for the shabby treatment given the fair last year by the people of Gresham. And that as the latter (the people of Gresham) now are in control it looks like a case of reciprocity right here at home.

What the above states and what it implies is startling indeed and would present a sad situation if true. As it is the only sad feature is that the Herald should make such statements with so little of truth to warrant them. There is every reason to believe the grangers of this section are as much interested in the fair and will take as much part in it as heretofore. All this suggestion about the granges feeling that they should retaliate and that the people of Gresham are in control in opposition to the granges, etc., etc., is mere rot and a glaring attempt to misrepresent only the attitude of the writer toward the fair, which is neither the attitude of a true granger or a true citizen. If the author of the insinuations thought any one felt as he represents many to feel he should have acted the part of any loyal citizen and tried to overcome such an attitude instead of giving it publicity and fostering the same.

The Fair is not Gresham's fair any more than it is strictly a grangers fair. The grangers have been treated right in the former exhibited right in the former exhibits and so has Gresham. Wherein then do the grangers want to retaliate?

Let each one do his part and all work together for the common good. The fair belongs to everyone and everyone to the fair—except the knocker.

A Londoner has invented a semaphore to signal following automobiles when he is going to stop. This is contrived to swing into position automatically when he applies the brakes.

MORE AND BETTER.

Our aim as producers, whether it be of farm products, or the products of art and manufacture, should be two-fold—more and better. It is not right to sacrifice quality for quantity, at the same time we cannot lose sight of any possible increase in quantity which does not sacrifice quality. It is the possibility of doing more for a given expense which makes it possible to lower the cost or improve the quality without raising the cost.

The men are succeeding today on the farm, in the offices and stores, and in the manufactories of our land are those who are thinking of these things. They are asking, How can I improve my methods? How can I do this work to better advantage? How can I give more for the money? How can I give a better product for the money?

The artist who, when asked how he mixed his paints, said he mixed them with his brains, had the key to the situation.

We have got to mix brains with everything and everything with brains today. Men get the biggest pay today for thinking. He who thinks most lives most. It's easier to work with the hands and feet than with the brains. The world is a school we are all attending but many of us are missing our lessons. Experience is our teacher but we are unmindful of her instruction.

We wish to apply this thought. Two men raise the same kind of apples, equally good. One throws them into a box, hauls them to market, gets a low price, says fruit growing doesn't pay. The other carefully selects and packs his fruit, studies the markets and picks his selling time and place, or exhibits his products, wins a few prizes—then the buyer seeks him and pays his price. He says fruit raising is fine business.

The other day right here in Gresham in a store the writer saw two crates of berries—same variety—same locality, looked just alike—except, one crate was evenly packed, the others were thrown in just as picked. In this case there was probably little if any difference in the price but it was easy to see which berries would go first.

This applies all along the line.

MELLOW WITH AGE.

A friend sends us a copy of a weekly, the Woodstock Sentinel, which has been published continuously at Woodstock, Illinois, for the past 55 years. It has one very interesting feature. There is a department containing items taken from the issues of long ago. Under the heading, Fifty Years Ago, is the reprint of items of that time, also forty, thirty and twenty years ago. They are interesting reading after all these years especially to persons, and there are doubtless many, who have lived there for thirty, forty and fifty years.

To us in the new localities of the west, where all but a few of the citizens are comparatively recent arrivals, and where changes are more frequent, it seems passing strange to pick up a paper and read, Volume Fifty-five. It almost smells musty with age.

A little flaxseed mixed with the morning meal will make the plumage shine.

Whitewash is better than paint on the poultry house for the reason that it costs less and has a purifying influence as well.

ARTICLES BY CHILDREN.

The Outlook has received an article entitled, "Pauline's Visit to the Coast." A letter accompanying it explains that it is by a reader who is 12 years old. She says "if it is good enough I would like to have it in your paper, The Outlook. No name is signed."

Both the letter and the article are neatly written, carefully punctuated and so far as we could notice the words were correctly spelled. We read the story and think it interesting and commend the enterprise of this young lady. The Outlook sees in her a coming correspondent or author of renown, and gladly publishes the story. It will be found elsewhere.

We will be pleased to hear from others. Write your vacation experiences for publication and send it to the Outlook.

It's easy enough to be pleasant When life flows by like a song, But the man worth while is the one who can smile When everything goes dead wrong

For the test of the heart is trouble, And it always comes with the years; And the smile that is worth the praises of earth Is the smile that shines through tears.
