general discussion in which many of the physicians expressed a desire to get to work at once to fight the disease through the destruction of cattle found to be infected. It was shown that it is possible by a process, before the tuberculin test is started, to make the test turn tables and in an infected cow show no infection. This practice, however, is said to be limited and undoubtedly more injury will result to the person who tries that than would if the animal were tested while in a normal condition, as the animal may not survive the drug process.

ACROSS THE CONTINENT

Description of recent journey by Rev. J. F. Dunlop.

Continued

There are two grain elevators, extensive cattle sheds, immigration buildings and hospital and other necessary facilities at St. John, and the wharf and warehouse accommodation is to be further extended and a great dry-dock built. The city is also the center of a great lumber and pulp industry, and has cotton mills and numerous other factories.

Aside from the attractions of its summer climate (the temperature rarely rising above 80 degrees) the whole region around St. John abounds in pleasing surprises for the stranger. There is first the great tidal variation in the Bay of Fundy. There is an average variation of about twenty feet in the harbor of St. John, and one cannot easily imagine the change it makes in the aspect of the wharves and shipping, as between high and low tide. This variation gives rise to a remarkable phenomenon, known as the "Reversing Falls," just above suspension and cantilever bridges. The river enters the harbor through a rock gorge, which at one point is only about five hundred feet wide. The span of the upper one of the two bridges is 477 feet. At the upper end of this gorge the waters of the river are met by a rocky barrier, over which when the tide is out below they tumble in a low waterfall and a succession of rapids and whirlpools extending away below the bridges. No boat can pass these falls in safety then. Lives have been lost there, and the bodies of men who may drift over the falls are seldom recovered. But, when the tide rises in the harbor below, it gradually overcomes these rapids and the falls, and, as it rises several feet higher than ordinary level of the river above, there occurs the remarkable spectacle, when the tide is at flood, of a fall in the other direction. The passage of the gorge cannot be made by vessels at flood tide; but at what is termed half-tide there is no fall or rapid in either direction, and vessels go up and down in perfect safety.

Rockwood Park is on an eminence just behind the city, and is very large in area, enclosing a lovely little lake, and having miles of drives and walks. From the summit of one hill the sight-seer overlooks the city and shore and bay, and many a mile of inland scenery, with glimpses of the river in the distance. There are pretty gardens tea-house in the park, and a number of moose, bear, deer and other animals and birds are to be seen there.

The St. John river is one of the great scenic rivers of the continent; not of the grand and terrible kind, but of a mingled picturesqueness and serene loveliness which make an hour, or a day, or a week, spent on its bosom a season of delight. All summer long the river is the mother of solace to which the weary turn for rest and renewed energy, and she never fails them. As yet there are no great hotels along the river, but there are a number of moderate capacity, and these and the farmhouses accommodate a great many people.

The St. John river is nearly five hundred miles long, having sources in the province of Quebec and the State of Maine, as well as in New Brunswick. It has large tributary lakes, which are navigated by steamer, and one large tributary, the Kennebecasis, joins it near its mouth and is close to the city. Between St. John and Fredericton, the beautiful capital of the province, 85 miles up, the river varies in width from less than a quarter of a mile to nearly a mile. At Fredericton it is over half a mile wide. Steamers run daily between the two cities, and others traverse the lakes. Every variety of scenery, from bold and rugged cliffs, some bare and some clothed with evergreens, to lowly intervals and islands, with green meadows and wooded hills in the background, greets the eye of the tourist during the journey from St. John to Fredericton. The windings of the river open up continuously new vistas of beauty, which are as yet unmarred by the device of man. Farms and villages are seen, and the spires of churches rising through the trees, but there are no great factories or smoking chimneys to mar the almost idyllic effect of the whole panoramic scene.
