The Outlook magazine for November thinks there is both religion and poetry, as well as pleasure and profit in apple growing.

Looked at, it says, from the new education point, the home orchard is a poem; for remember that the oldest poetry was not that of words, but that of things; and this is what we mean the new farming to achieve—that is, to work wit, wisdom and beauty into corn fields and the apple orchard. They are just as important as manure and fertilizers. Without them farming is a superficial affair, that wastes manhood in mental toil.

If you would be a scholar, plant apple trees; if you would be well educated, go to school in the orchard. If you would be an artist, study the color of the Spitzenberg. If you would have your children love the country, let them grow fruit and love the beautiful, as they create. If you would be a Christian shut the gate and do your duty by tree and soil. There is too much talk in the world and too little achievement.
