We have resolved to put our store on a strictly cash basis and are going to quote prices that will pay our customers to pay cash. Manufacturers and Jobbers give us better prices for cash and we in turn are going to give our customers the benefit of a cash system. All we ask is a fair comparison of prices between our store and stores running a credit business and we will demonstrate to you beyond a doubt that it pays to trade at a cash store.

BROTHERLINESS.

We are all related. If not closely by the ties of nature, we are all related as brothers of a common humanity. This thought should inspire us to more of forgiveness and charity toward our fellowmen, and more of sympathy with the sick, the sorrowing and the dying.

We all must suffer. It is our appointed lot. But nothing lightens the sorrow and care like the thought that someone knows and cares and is trying to help us bear the load. Who has not felt almost overwhelmed with some heavy load of affliction? Someone has shown by word or deed a deep realization of your trouble. How instructively you have said, "Oh, it is not so bad after all".

While many in this locality have been called upon of late to say farewell to a loved one many others have felt as truly if not as deeply the loss of a friend. "Friend after friend departs, who hath not lost a friend?"

The bond of love is the bond of perfectness and sympathy is one of the offices of brotherly love.

The press is a public servant somewhat like a railroad. It has a duty to perform to the public, according to the decision of the supreme court of Missouri, it may criticize those occupying public positions but must base its criticism on statement of facts. The freedom of the press is one of the guarantees of liberties.

A MAN OF LARGE HEART

"He was a good neighbor, a kind-hearted man. He would suffer a wrong rather than inflict one". So said the speaker at the funeral of the late Andrew B. Gibbs. He was not a Christian according to the common acceptance of the term, but he was a man of many worthy traits of character, though himself conscious of weaknesses. We should not be harsh in criticizing another for we knew so little of what he has had to contend with. He may fall short of your ideal, but he may be more of a man at heart than another with a more perfect outward life.

ELECTION ISSUES

Next Tuesday, town election will occur in Gresham, Fairview and Troutdale. There are no particular issues involved in either place and the only concern of importance to the voters is to elect men who will administer the affairs of the city in the cleanest and most business-like way.

We know there is great divergence of opinion as to what constitutes a business-like administration. Some will say, the more saloons, the more business. Yes, that is true as to business of that character. And that is what some towns seem to want. Our councilmen are elected on no particular issue unless it be saloons or no saloons and if the town or precinct is not "voted dry", it is easy to assume that the majority of citizens want saloons. Of course, a councilman considers that he is elected to do what the people who elected him want done. But aside from all of this a town incorporation is mainly a business affair and should be run on sound business principles for business purposes and not for sentiment. Hence in all municipalities the voters should try to select, as councilmen, not necessarily business men, but men who have the business as well as the moral interest of the community at heart.

Where you are is of no moment, but only what you are doing there. It is not the place that counts on you, but you the place; and this only by doing that which is great and noble—Petrach.

Middleman Gets Too Much.

Unless signs fail, we are on the eve of another period of co-operative associations. There seems to be a suspicion that someone is charging too much for the necessities of life as they pass from the producer to the consumer. It has been announced that of the $13,000,000,000 paid annually by American consumers, $7,000,000,000 of it goes to the middleman. As a protest against this and to reduce the cost of things co-operative associations are once more beginning to spring into existence. Anything for relief?—Epworth Herald.

Acreage in the West.

There are hundreds of people cooped up in dark and dingy alleys and rooms in the east who should be out in the great sunlight and free atmosphere of the west. Hundreds of acres are awaiting the advent of man. Even around the city of Portland the opportunity is presented to get out on an acre tract, away from the noise and dust of the city, and get a new inspiration of life. People who are caged up all the week in offices need the fresh atmosphere. The construction of electric lines in every direction and the use of the automobile places the opportunity at the disposal of each individual. Instead of a small lot have an acre or more and raise your own eatables and live like a prince. Let politics and the like go to the bow-bows when you are thus situated.—Oregon Mining and Timber Journal.

No one can find fault with Oregon's Thanksgiving weather.

Oregon is a good place to spend Thanksgiving. It would be hard to find a place where there was more to be thankful for or more to be thankful with.

The Charpitting Method of Destroying Stumps.

Charpitting method of destroying stumps is one of the oldest. It has not come into general use, since conditions under which charpitting will take place are seldom ideal, and since the variable physical condition of the soils and stumpage is such as could not be desired for the best success. The method works well in most soils having a good percentage of clay, but where the soil will cave in when the wood is consumed, as is the case in nearly all sandy soils, far less satisfactory results are secured. Briefly, charpitting consists in piling a ring of kindling around the base of a stump, covering the same to a depth of about six inches with sod, except an opening, preferably on the windward side, where the fire will be started. Later this opening or vent is closed. This should not be done, however, until the kindling is all burning. After the fire is completely covered it should be and must be confined until the charring has been completed. The methods of burning in clay and in sandy soils vary somewhat. In all cases it is best to remove the bark from the crown as low as the kindling is placed, so that the kindling will be in contact with the wood. In clay soils the usual plan is to place the kindling around the stump at the surface, as explained, but in sandy soils a narrow trench several inches in depth is dug around the base, the bark removed to the depth of the trench, after which the kindling is put in place and the covering placed over it. It is necessary to use an artificial covering under such conditions, since sod from sandy soil, in burning, allows the sand to run in, putting out the fire. Mixing clay with sandy soil gives the desired result, and such a practice can be had at a reasonable cost of time and labor. Some experiments have been conducted in using an artificial covering of cool ashes, and with considerable success. Trials have also been made with fuel oil mixed with sawdust and a small amount of kindling covered with various natural and artificial coverings, and with various degrees of success.

Concerning the charpitting method, it must be said that the best success is met with where well drained clay soils of considerable depth occur, that do not become loose and powdery when heated. Under soil conditions where stumps will burn out to a good depth and the larger roots are consumed to a depth of several feet, leaving a tunnel in the soil, thus marking its course, the method can be said to be pre-eminently practical, and especially so where money is not available for land clearing by the more rapid and expensive methods, such as using a stump burner, a stump pulling device.—W. H. Lawrence in Better Fruit.

Profits in Poultry Raising

The profits are there, and the profits are great; but to get them you must apply right methods. You cannot learn from a book. Rule-of-thumb methods take time and often end disastrously. The right way is to be guided by poultry experts who have already "made good." That is the kind of instruction the International Correspondence Schools offer in their course of 21 home lessons in poultry raising. The course covers everything on poultry raising, from eggs to profits. It doesn't matter how few or how many birds you start with, this is the only true way to do it and make it pay from the word "go."

The value of this course to you is beyond estimation. You soon get the price back, and more, in increased profits, and the knowledge that will keep those profits coming your way. Start poultry raising right this way, then there'll be no failure—no halfway success—but the greatest success. For free descriptive circular, write the
