"The Linotype Way is the Way that Wins."

Entered as second-class matter March 3, 1911, at the post office at Gresham, Oregon, under the act of March 3, 1879.

The December issue of the Life Line has been printed and is being put in circulation. This is the monthly paper of the Bethel Baptist church at this place. It is edited by the pastor, Rev. F. M. Burtch. It is bright and interesting and ought to be welcomed in any home. The enterprise of the pastor is commendable. As many subscriptions as possible, at 25 cents each, would encourage him.

Whittier, writing of some of his friends who had gone, said: "Where they are and how they are, I would be glad to know, but I have a fixed faith that it is well with them. They are in his hands, who can have no motive to do otherwise than the best that is possible for them and for us all."

IS IT A PERIL ?

An interesting article relative to the influx of Japanese to the communities and farms in this part of Oregon appeared recently in the Oregonian. It was from the facile pen of Eugene L. Thorpe. The article has attracted more than usual attention, the Oregonian even devoting considerable editorial space to a discussion of the subject.

As it is a timely and interesting subject and well treated we have given our readers the benefit of this editorial.

We do not feel however, like raising a hue and cry over this apparent tendency. In other words we don't know what right we have to condemn those who find it and advantage to either sell or lease their land to Japanese gardeners or farmers. Nor can we condemn the Japanese for seeking the opportunities the land offers. They are willing to pay well and the proprietors want all they can get. The latter evidently find the arrangement more convenient and profitable than working the land themselves or leasing it to white men.

In short, we do not consider there is a real peril in this connection. The Japanese are not a menace. They are industrious and skillful gardeners and farmers. They are hard working and honest. They know how to make the soil productive. They are helping the farmer solve the problem of hired labor. They will do a class of work which white men cannot be easily hired to do.

They are not a menace because they help make the land more productive and are clearing up and using many acres that would otherwise lie waste. Their influx is not driving the white man from the soil. There is plenty of room left. These foreigners are found in considerable numbers in the vicinity of all cities, where they are the gardening class. As between the Italians and Japanese there is not much choice but we think the latter are the more industrious and peaceable.

We need more white settlers on the land, but we are likely to have to share our opportunities more and more with foreigners, including orientals.

PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION

Representative A. W. Lafferty says in a recent letter that during his service in congress, he will devote his main energies toward the securing of a national public service commission, with power to fix the rates and charges of money, based upon actual physical valuations and reasonable interest returns to the end that the cost of living shall be reduced to every household at least $200 per year, and also devote much time to the securing of laws for the development of Oregon.

THE JAPANESE FARMER

The Oregonian in the following article based largely on data furnished by our fellow townsman, E. L. Thorpe, certainly gives our Japanese gardeners and farmers much credit for their industry and furnishes no little food for thoughtful study and comparison on the part of our Anglo Saxon farmers.

As noted by Eugene L. Thorpe, correspondent of the Oregonian and for many years a resident of Eastern Multnomah, the "yellow peril" seems to threaten that section of the country. Mr. Thorpe, however, adds that "whether the effects of the Japanese invasion of these fertile acres will be serious or not remains to be developed".

Pursuing the subject intelligently and in detail, Mr. Thorpe says that many of the finest farms in Eastern Multnomah are controlled through long lease by Japanese gardeners; that under this control the owners of the land are realizing more money each year than they did when running the farms themselves; that the Japanese invasion began about five years ago in the Russellville and that practically one-half the lands contiguous to that place, which is really but an extension of Montavilla, are under Japanese lease, the efforts of these painstaking, indefatigable gardeners having been extended to the raising of all kinds of small fruits and vegetables; that farther east the same conditions prevail with the additional fact that they are extending their efforts to raising potatoes, hay and staple vegetables which they market themselves; that they are "good farmers and know how to make things grow and how to sell them after they are grown" and finally that these little brown men are by sheer industry making money, "even though they are paying big sums for the use of the land".

How now, farmers of Eastern Multnomah? You who have possessed this garden spot for years, without being able to make the land intensively productive? Would you be willing, even if assured of double the profit that your tenants make by tilling this generous soil, to devote the labor and the hours, and employ the methods that are the stepping stones to their success? Would you not rather take your rental of $15 an acre for the use of your land and let these toilers use it?

It is said that the Japanese and Chinese are "natural gardeners". This is merely to say that they are painstaking and thorough; that they work early and spare neither labor nor skill necessary to "make things grow", and that they are on the road with loads of clean, well-sorted vegetables in the twilight that precedes the break of day in summer, while yet the white farmers are sound asleep.

This invasion of the Japanese is not in any sense a hostile invasion. It is an industrial invasion pure and simple, into a vocation the rudiments of which alone were mastered by the owners of the land. It is the exceptional farmer who takes an interest and pride in his garden and who brings the skill, industry and intelligence to bear upon gardening that are necessary to success. Left to the efforts of overworked women and careless children, with domestic fowls as auxiliary "scratchers" the farm garden too often is but a waste of stunted vegetables struggling with weeds while as to garden for market, where is the farmer who will attempt it, or the farmer's wife who has the strength and time from her domestic duties to pursue it?

Yet our market is clamorous and growing. Its needs can only be supplied by systematic, persistent, energetic labor. In this view it would seem that the industrial invasion of Eastern Multnomah by the Japanese is an invasion that was invited first by the inability or disinclination of the landowners of that section to do market gardening, and, second, by the demands of a market that white labor made little or no attempt to supply.

It is said by Mr. Thorpe that the white farmer of the section under consideration is now compelled to resort to the raising of hay, grain and potatoes for shipment in bulk, being unable to compete with the Japanese in producing and marketing the lesser crops. This, together with the fact as before stated that owners of land are making more rentals than they ever made by working the land themselves, and that they never did excel in small gardening and never expected to garden for profit, should dispel any fear of ruinous competition because of this industrial invasion of garden lands by the Japanese.

THERE IS A BETTER WAY

An instance of the evil effect of our jury system is now before the public in the disappearance of Harry Waldron, a juror in the Hyde-Swope murder case at Kansas City. This will mean a mistrial after great expense.

Waldron had been on about six weeks, during which time he had not been permitted to visit his home. He is a dairyman and struggling to get on his feet financially. All this worried him along with the tediousness of the trial. It is said he protested on account of business.

Sunday morning Waldron was found to be missing. He had escaped in the night, climbing out through a transom and letting himself down by means of the fire escape.

Jury service is often a burden and an inconvenience and very often a financial loss. It is tiresome beyond description to listen to the trial of most cases and when drawn out for days and weeks a man, whose mind is not used to close thinking, a man used to out of door work, is driven almost to distraction. If at the same time he has business worries he is poorly qualified to serve in such a responsible capacity.

There are many who are qualified in every way for this service to their fellow men and the state. It would be no hardship in the matter of time or expense. Instead of drawing men more or less promiscuously from the tax roll, why could not the assessor or other county official make up a list of men available, for jury service and omit the names of those who would suffer loss or hardship by such service, omit the names of incompetents, and thus make the jury system less of a burden to the individual and less of an expense to the county?

President Chas. C. Moore, of the Panama-Pacific Exposition, will soon visit Oregon cities to impress upon them the importance of the coming fair and to urge their co-operation and assistance. President Moore looks to the Pacific Northwest for valuable assistance in making the Exposition a success.

Profits in Poultry Raising

The profits are there, and the profits are great; but to get them you must apply right methods. You cannot learn from a book. Rule-of-thumb methods take time and often end disastrously. The right way is to be guided by poultry experts who have already "made good." That is the kind of instruction the International Correspondence Schools offer in their course of 21 home lessons in poultry raising. The course covers everything on poultry raising, from eggs to profits. You soon get the price back, and more, in increased profits, and the knowledge that will try raising right, this way, then there'll be no failure—no halfway success—but the greatest success.
