Vegetables on the Farm.

Every farm home should be surrounded with those things which have a tendency to make life on the farm enjoyable, useful, and complete in every way. This can be done in an easy and effective way by resorting to the use of various kinds of horticultural plants.

Of all plants which meet the first requirements of the farmers' table the garden plants are of prime importance. Every farm should have its well-planned and cultured vegetable garden. The plan of such a garden must be carefully made if best results are to be expected. A farmer must plan his garden for the highest possible returns at the minimum expenditure of time and labor. A judicious arrangement of the garden should give a continuous supply of vegetables throughout the season. At the experiment station of the Idaho University a typical farmer's vegetable garden was maintained in order to secure definite data on methods of culture, yield, cost of production and advisability of maintaining such a garden on the farms of Idaho. It was found in 1908 that the value of the product from one-half acre of garden was $82.19 and the net profits were $57.41. The value of the products of the same area in 1909 was $98.38, and the profits were $79.22. This was the financial condition, but the pleasure of fresh vegetables of all kinds in their season, and the real fun of growing such a garden were not computed in dollars and cents.—Idaho Experiment Station.

P leasant Home

Professor Hunter of Portland who visits the school here every Thursday and teaches music, is arousing great interest in the study and making it very helpful to the pupils both large and small. A desire has been expressed to have the parents visit the school and see for themselves.

The Pleasant Home Athletic club, recently organized, which formerly met in Quay's hall, is now meeting every Tuesday and Friday night in the Douglass hall. They have strict rules of order and are doing good work. Their aim is to be prepared for lady visitors whom they invite to come at any time. They plan to open a reading room in connection with their club. A drama will be given in the near future to help meet the expenses of the club.

The item in a recent Outlook intimating that this place was to be named Scenic has aroused unusual interest. The Scenic people resent the idea and are determined to hold on to their name. It is time for Pleasant Home people to wake up and do some of the things they have been talking about.

Mrs. Al. De Haven and Mrs. W. W. Breeden were Portland visitors today.

Mrs. E. M. Douglass will spend about a week at her sister's Mrs. Fannie Laughlin, in Portland.

Special Services at Pleasant Home.

The newly organized chorus choir at Pleasant Home is rendering valuable assistance in the meetings.

Everything is pretty quiet around Boring at present on account of the scarlet fever which broke out here a couple of weeks ago. There are no new cases and those that are under quarantine are getting along nicely. The malady is in very light form, some of the patients have not been confined to their beds at all. It is hoped there will be no new cases and that the quarantine may soon be lifted. The schoolhouse has been fumigated and school will reopen on Monday.

Cauliflower.

Will it pay me to grow cauliflower for the market? When such questions are asked, I will say it depends very largely on the man who is going into the business. There is a constant and growing demand for good cauliflower in the markets and the man who will commence supply the demand and supply it all through the year will have all he can see to and will make a good profit at the business. Of course, the soil must be rich—the richer the better. If the ground can be irrigated during the dry season—June, July and August—it will return much larger and finer heads which will bring much better prices. The first crop in the spring should be set the latter part of February or by the first of March and then make settings as often as every month till the middle of August. Set the early varieties such as Early Snowball and similar kinds up to the first of May, then set Dry Weather or some like it till the first of July, then the late such as Algiers or the like. Put out the broccoli the latter part of June up to the first of August; these will head the following winter in February and March. By setting plants in this way the cauliflower will be had nearly continuously all the year. The cauliflower is not quite as hardy as the cabbage although some seasons the plants can be set out in the open field in Decmeber and they will stand all right through the winter and head the next spring in April and May. As a general thing it is the safest to wait until about the first of March whne the plants can be safely set. The cauliflower needs about the same treatment as the cabbage. Some cabbage will grow on quite poor land and make a few small heads but when one grows cauliflower he wants good-sized heads if he expects people to buy and for this reason he must have rich land and cultivate the crop well.

We want specialists in gardening as well as the professions. Do not try too many things at a time, but make thorough work with those you do try. Select your crop, find your market, and go to work—and expect that you will have to work if you succeed.—Dexter Fields in the Pacific Homestead.
