Smelt Coming Up Columbia River.
The smelt season is on. Word has been received that this delicious little fish is coming into the Columbia river by the millions. Many persons in this locality are accustomed to take a day off and go to the river with dip nets and pails and lay in a large supply. While it takes five to ten of the "small fry" to satisfy an adult, they are easily cleaned, quickly cooked and are pleasant eating. The quickest way to clean them is to use a pair of strong shears, clip off the heads, and tails and slit open the body for cleaning. They come quickly and usually in great numbers but the season is short. They are not easily preserved for future use.
