THE VOYAGE.

Strongly built of iron and steel
Strong as any ship could be,
Was the Titanic, starting on
Her maiden voyage across the sea.

She was furnished with every convenience,
And filled with as gay a crowd
As ere sailed upon the sea.

Five short days sped they onward,
Five days that were happy to all
Yet they dreamed not how soon
The sea for its prey would call.

None thought aught of any danger
On that last clear silent night,
As the ship sped swiftly onward
To her doom's dark plight.

Then there came a crash
That shook her massive frame,
Still they trusted in her
Till the last great danger came.

Sadly, sadly came the parting,
As the last few words were spoken
Between men that must remain
There,
And the women with hearts broken.

Then they had no time to ponder
Over things that might be done,
But they helped them into life boats
Then lowered them one by one.

Till at last the women
All were safely anchored in,
All but those who chose to meet
Their death
On board the ship with kith and kin.

Last of all was seen the captain,
Bravely standing on the deck,
Though he knew at any moment
He might sink with all the wreck.

As the ship was slowly sinking,
Sinking down into the sea,
They could hear the band still playing,
"Nearer, Nearer My God to Thee."
ALBERTA SCHNEIDER,
Orient, Oregon.

The above poem was written by an Orient school girl and shows commendable literary ability and enterprise.—Editor.
