

AUTO UPSETS; NO ONE HURT

Marvellous Escape of Mrs. M. Schneider Whose Auto Cuts Up Capers.

Max Schneider, the Gresham photographer, is exceeding thankful he still has a wife and Mrs. Schneider is thankful too. It came near being otherwise.

Mrs. Schneider started to go down to the depot in her auto about ten o'clock this morning and came near going into Johnson creek auto and all.

When the auto, which was going at a moderate speed, struck the sand near the new bridge the wheels skidded off at the side so quickly that before Mrs. Schneider could get control of her machine, it crashed through the railing at the west side and jumped to the ground about six feet below. In doing so the car was overturned and landed with Mrs. Schneider underneath. Help came immediately and the car was righted. It was found that Mrs. Schneider was only slightly bruised, and the car, a Ford, was not badly damaged. Earl Thompson who witnessed the accident, took the car in charge and brought it out under its own power.

Mrs. Schneider was perfectly self-possessed after the accident and showed her pluck by walking up town and later returning to the scene of the accident. She declared she felt perfectly normal but presumed she would feel the nervous shock later. All are exceedingly thankful the affair was not more serious.

ONE DOLLAR, PLEASE, MR.

The Ladies Aid society will hold a Dollar social at the Grange hall next Friday evening, June 7. At least one dollar is expected of each member and friend of the church. If they do not send them word that you will give a dollar, if you do not do either of these, go to the social and give a dollar, but give a dollar anyway. F. S. of E. Meets Saturday.

A meeting of the Multnomah County Union, F. S. of E. will be held in Gresham next Saturday at 2 p. m. for the purpose of adopting by laws and completing the organization of the co-operative association which has been incorporated under the name of the Gresham Equity Market. Considerable money has been subscribed but more is urgently needed in order that the plan to establish a cannery in connection with the market may be carried out. Some good sites are available and it is expected that a building suitable for the in stallment of the cannery will be completed before the end of the month. The board of directors will hold a meeting during Saturday forenoon and will be glad to receive suggestions or subscriptions to the capital of the company.

This capital is being raised among the farmers and friends in amounts running from $10 to $250 each and the more that can be obtained before next Saturday the more the board will have to build its plans on. Everyone interested in the establishment of this market and cannery ought to be present next Saturday afternoon not only to encourage those who have been pushing this matter for many months but also prepared to aid the project in a financial way.

Whooping cough is not dangerous when the cough is kept loose and expectoration easy by giving Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It has been used in many epidemics of this disease with perfect success. For sale by Gresham Drug Co., and all Dealers.

L. L. LEE AT BORING ENDS OWN LIFE

BORING, June 3.—L. L. Lee, living on a small tract of land near the town limits, shot himself through the right temple Sunday afternoon about 2 o'clock with suicidal intent. That the deed was premeditated was shown by letters previously written to friends asking them to call that he wished to transact some business with them. When they arrived he was found sitting dressed in his best clothes at the table unconscious and a revolver lying on the floor. Dr. Esson of Sandy was called and the man removed to Oregon City by automobile. No hope is offered for his recovery. Lee, who is of Swedish descent, was insane about one year ago, but was discharged later and returned to Boring where he has been at work cutting cordwood.

SEVENTH CLASS GRADUATES FROM GRESHAM HIGH

Splendid Record Made by Class of Ten Who Take as Motto, "Nil Desperandum."

SCHOOL HAS 47 GRADUATES

"Nil Desperandum."

Never was more appropriate motto chosen by a high school class than the above which, suspended from the ceiling, told a large audience at the assembly hall of the Gresham high school last Friday night the real story of the success of nine ladies and one young man. It was a story full of heroism which reflected great credit on the members of the class, their teachers and parents.

Those graduating were Freda Bratzel, Elsie Shultz, Hilda Muenster, Gladys Miller, Harold Kern, Willa Metzger, Geneva Wright, Bessie Howitt, Ida Retig, and Bessie Strebin.

The program of the exercises was as follows:

Orchestra; invocation by Rev. F. H. Freund; trio, "A Beautiful World," Viola Mathews, Grace Hesse, Isabel Metzger; Grace Lawrence, accompanist; orchestra; address by Dean Cordley of the Oregon Agricultural College; orchestra; presentation of class by Mrs. C. B. Woodard; presentation of diplomas by Theodore Brugger; orchestra, benediction by Rev. F. H. Freund.

Dean Cordley's address was full of inspirational thought and will be found in full in this issue.

Mrs. Woodard, assistant principal of the high school, who has helped to pilot the young people through the difficulties of their course, in presenting the class spoke words that will long be remembered. She said:

Mrs. Woodard's Presentation Speech.

Dear Friends: We present to you ten young people, ten ambitious young people who desire to be useful in this world. When this class entered high school there were twenty-six of them; five of that number are graduating tonight, when are the other twenty-one? I do not know. A few moved away from Gresham, others quit on account of ill health and a few lacked "stick-to-it-iveness" to remain and win. The other five of the ten graduates have entered since their freshman year. I can say without eulogizing this class that I have never appealed to the manhood and womanhood in them and found the good lacking. Several of these girls are heroines for we know the struggles and sacrifices they have endured in order to be able to attend school. While it is true that, "He, who does the best his circumstance allows; does well, acts nobly, angels could do no more," yet to a great extent, you, my friends, determine what these circumstances shall be. You have a Commercial club in your midst, the object of which is, I believe, to beautify your streets, enlarge your buildings and develop your town. That is all well and good, but shouldn't we have a club organized that would help to give our brightest young people a chance in life? Well developed citizens are more desirable than a beautiful city and how many of us will help those who are too poor, to go farther, by giving them money, or at least work to do during the summer, in order that they may help themselves.

Eight out of these ten, are farmers' children, the other two are children of our successful business men. Now, class, my best wishes for you are, that you may find harder work than we have given you, and that you may do it well, for work is the salvation of the race. "Our hearts, our hopes, our prayers, our tears, are all with thee"—our Senior Class.

Mrs. Woodard then called up each member of the class and presented them to the board for graduation. She made her talk so direct and personal and put such a soulful feeling into it that all listeners were deeply moved and felt that Mrs. Woodard's attitude toward the scholars had been such as to develop the better qualities in them.

Following the exercises, the graduates with their parents, the juniors, the members of the school board and a few other friends, repaired to the banquet hall where a splendid repast was served. This was the annual banquet given by the juniors in honor of the senior class. The hall was beautifully decorated in crimson and green, roses being much in evidence, and on the senior's table was a beautiful centerpiece of crimson carnations. The most striking feature of the decorations however, was a large shield, the class emblem, which was outlined and lettered in electric lights. The electrical work was done by the junior boys, showed remarkable skill. The menu cards were also shield shaped, and in the colors of the senior class, and gave the seven course banquet in German. Russell Pugh of the junior class presided over the after dinner speeches. He called upon Harold Kern to tell how a senior feels. Dean Cordley spoke a few words of encouragement and advice and suggested O. A. C. as a good place for further study. Miss Haile gave a greeting to the class, and Floyd Metzger, though a junior, disclosed some of the secrets of the seniors. The evening closed with a song to the seniors by the juniors, and with the class yell.

The freshman class acted as waiters for the occasion.

ADDRESS BY DEAN CORDLEY

Agricultural Authority Gives the Students Good Advice.

Dean Cordley of the O. C. explained that President Kerr was unexpectedly detained and he esteemed it a privilege to speak at the graduation exercises of the Gresham high school. He said:

I esteem it a great pleasure and a great responsibility to speak the words which custom has decreed shall signalize the close of your high school days. In a very real sense, you are the picked youth of this community. You have completed the full twelve grades of the Oregon Public school system. You have stood the test and are now ready for graduation. Indeed, you have been graduating for many years. Our school system is a process of sifting from beginning to end. Each grade sifts out from the preceding one—the grammar grades sift out from the primary—and the high school from the grammar grades. At the end of each grade only a portion passes on. It is a sort of a survival of the fittest from the first primary to the final graduation. You have been sifted from the many who began with you and have left your companions at different stations by the wayside. In a very real sense you are the picked specimens of the product of our educational system. An orchard produced 2,000 boxes of beautiful apples. At the harvest the pickers were instructed to lay aside the choicest specimens. Twenty boxes were thus secured from which five boxes of beautiful specimens were prepared for exhibition purposes, but for the final test from these five boxes one box only, of the most perfect specimens, was selected. This brief and true history of a prize box of apples is an epitome of your scholastic career. You have been chosen to receive the prize. You are selected material from the highest process of our educational methods.

Having successfully passed your examinations and being presented by your faculty for graduation, I am justified in speaking to you and of you as students. I want to speak this evening of those elements of a student's success which determine his value to himself and to the world. I will cluster what I have to say under three heads: 1. The student's capital; 2. The student's training; 3. The student's purpose or aim. In other words, we will ask what has he received of capacity? What will he make of it by training? What will he do with these in life? I speak of the power received, the training given, and the end sought.

The student's capital. A man commencing business must consider the capital he has to work with. As usually considered, it is the money in his pocket. A student's capital is the brains he has in his head. It is the faculty he has been endowed with. Education does not create anything; it only enlarges and refines. It does not create capacity; it only fills out. You have all heard the story of the rich man's son who was sent to a noted teacher for training. After a season of trial the teacher sent the boy home with a note, saying that he could do nothing with the boy for he had no capacity. The father who, like the father of Flora McFlimney "little by little had grown rich, by saving of candle ends and such," wrote back: "Buy him a capacity; we will not stand on a little expense." But capacities are not for sale in the market; and one can have only what has been given him. Money will buy many things but not this. A man may buy a poem. In slavery times he might buy a poet; but he can never buy the power to be a poet. An ignorant man was elected to a high office. He went to a judge to be sworn in. "I have been elected to such an office and I want you to qualify me." The judge replied, "I can swear you in but I can not qualify you. That was God's work and he has not seen fit to do it." A student needs to know himself. He needs to cultivate the power he has and not waste his time in trying to develop powers he never had and never can have.

You can never put a fine polish on a piece of basswood. You can never make a keen blade from a bar of pewter. A tin sword may glisten but it will not cut. Men are not all made alike and they are not all made of the same size. They vary in kind, and quality. And there is a variety of service awaiting their verging capacities. Not every one can be a poet or a singer. All men have something of everything, but they are not all endowed alike. All men have something of invention but all men can not be inventors. All men have something of poetry, but they can not all be poets—as any editor will tell you in the spring time. All men have music in their souls, and they say everyone can learn to sing. But, as Artemus Ward says, "Some people are saddest when they sing; so are those who hear them." We are often made sorry that our neighbor's daughter was taught to play the
