"The Linotype Way is the Way that Wins."

Official paper of the Town of Gresham, Oregon.
Official paper of the Town of Fairview, Oregon.

Entered as second-class matter March 3, 1911, at the post office at Gresham, Oregon, under the act of March 3, 1879.

Jack Roberts, tried for the murder of George Hastings and Donald McC. Stewart on the Whitehouse road, March 29, was found guilty of murder in the first degree. He has had a criminal career of many years, though a young man.

The United States bureau of Education has compiled statistics which show that it costs an average of 18 cents a school day per child to put the rising generation of this country through the elementary and high school grades.

One of the most potent factors in arousing local sentiment for good roads, says the Oregonian, is the automobile. Every farmer who purchases a car at once becomes an ardent advocate for better highways. A man who never shuddered at the sight of his poor horses toiling, and sweating over an infernal apology for a road at once becomes sensitive to its defects when he is driving an automobile.

Of course our congressmen need their little "day off" and a chance to show their devotion to the great national game. So it happened that the young Democratic and Republican congressmen met last Saturday on the grounds at the ball park and played a rousing game for the benefit of the Washington Playgrounds Association and Boy Scouts of America. Lafferty is said to have made the best score and of course the Democrats won the game. The score was 20 to 21.

J. Woods Smith, Democratic candidate for State Senator, is a strong advocate of the so-called "Blue Sky" law, but does not like the feature which provides for a state commission at a yearly expense of perhaps $25,000. He thinks the governor, secretary of state, and two or three others of the paid officials of the state could see that the provisions of the law were carried out. He says this is the plan of the Kansas law after which the proposed Oregon law is patterned, except in that particular. The general plan of the law as favored by Mr. Smith is as follows:

To create a State Corporation Commission composed of the Bank Commissioner, Secretary of State and Attorney General whose duty it shall be to examine into the business affairs and solidity of every corporation or firm who shall desire to sell their bonds or stock in this state, and if on due inquiry the Commission finds that the bonds or stocks offered for sale have a real value, they are to issue a state license permitting their sale within the state. No bonds or stocks can be sold in Oregon without this state license which gives the buyers notice that they have a true value and are not "blue sky" like many worthless stocks and bonds which have been sold on the Portland market to innocent and unsuspecting purchasers who could not afford to lose their money. He proposes a severe penalty to any corporation or firm selling worthless stocks or bonds without the license of the State Corporation Commission. This certainly is an excellent law, greatly needed in Oregon, and will be a protection against the imposition of schemes on the unsuspecting. Mr. J. Woods Smith was the first one to propose this most admirable law for Oregon.

The voters in November will vote on the making of such a law.

Sharing the Flowers

To the Editor of the Outlook:—
An article upon the following subject appeared in the June number of the Farm and Fireside, but as there are many people who do not take this paper, I thought perhaps you would give your assistance in bringing the proposition before the public by publishing a brief article upon the subject.

We who live in the country, where the fields and roadsides abound with flowers and grasses, can scarcely realize what it means to live in a place where there are no flowers, no grasses, no trees. Think of the countless children to whom the gift of a buttercup or a clover even would be an event, to remember for many days. Does it not seem pathetic the many common flowers which we consider scarcely worthy of notice, would give them a glimpse of heaven?

It will cost you nothing more than a few postage stamps, and a little time. If you are interested, write to the National Plant, Flower and Fruit Guild, 70, Fifth avenue, New York City. They will give you instructions as to the shipment, without expense to you, of the flowers and plants of which you have so many.

What a grand opportunity this is for the children of our schools and Sunday schools. It will help them to understand the need of the children of the slums, and it will help them to appreciate the gifts of nature which are everywhere about them.

Don't let this matter slip your mind, write at once. While you are waiting there are thousands of little children and men and women longing for a green plant or a real flower. Their need makes our obligation. Let us do what we can to make their lives a little richer and in doing so, we ourselves will find a real pleasure.

MAVE LOVELACE.

The Fourth was made the occasion at Albany of the celebration in honor of the opening of the Oregon Electric to that section of the valley. Many representative citizens of Portland were present. Exercises were held in chautauqua park and there was a great industrial and civic parade.

Thursday, July 11, has been proclaimed a legal holiday by Governor West, in honor of the visit of the Elks. Elks week in Portland will be July 8 to 14. The observance of the visit of the thousands who will be in Portland and Oregon on that occasion will be second only to the Rose Festival so recently held.

An exchange, objecting to the safe and sane Fourth, says: "Give the young America a chance to keep the patriotic fires burning." That's what generally results from the "fireworks Fourth."

It is time to let people know all over the state that the next great event (after the Elks' convention,) will be the County Fair, Oct. 2, 3, 4, 5, at Gresham.

Sprains require careful treatment. Keep quiet and apply Chamberlain's Liniment freely. It will remove the soreness and quickly restore the parts to a healthy condition. For sale by Gresham Drug Co., and all Dealers.

How to Make Jelly.

How to avoid the "candyng" and make jelly "jelly" is told in an article written by Miss Margaret McCall of Albany, a graduate of the Oregon Agricultural College department of domestic science, in the last number of "The Oregon Countryman," published by the students.
"The most common disappointments in jelly making are failure of the jelly to harden, and the candyng of the jelly," says Miss McCall. "Jelly is made by combining sugar and fruit juice and heating to the boiling point for a short time. The ability of the fruit to form jelly is owing to a substance called pectin, present in all fruit when ripe or nearly so. Pectin is similar to starch, and it is the action of the pectin and the acid in the fruit which causes it to gelatinize."
"Fruit for jelly should be selected carefully, being not over-ripe so that the pectin is at its best. It should be freshly picked and free as possible from defects. Any defective part should be removed. An acid fruit is usually preferable for jelly. Some acid fruits, however, are deficient in pectin, and thus difficult to make into jelly. This trouble may be overcome by adding fruit juice containing a large amount of pectin. The flavor will be modified, but in many cases the result is a very good jelly."

"Some of the most desirable fruits for jelly making are currants, blackberries, raspberries, loganberries, grapes, quinces, peaches, apples and crabapples. Juicy fruits, such as currants, and berries, should not be gathered after a rain on account of the large amount of moisture they have absorbed. They should, for the same reason, be washed as quickly as possible."
"They may be put in the preserving kettle after washing, crushed slightly with a wooden spoon and heated slowly, while they are stirred at frequent intervals. When the fruit is hot it should be crushed thoroughly with a wooden vegetable masher. It should then be strained through a double thickness of cheesecloth placed over a wire strainer, which is over a large bowl. It should drain as long as the juice will drip, and pressure should not be used. The clear juice may be used at once, or may be strained through a funnel bag before use."

"When the juice has been measured into a clean preserving kettle, a pint of granulated sugar should be added for every pint of juice and stirred until dissolved. When it has been put on the fire and brought to a boil, it should be drawn back and skimmed. This should be repeated twice before pouring the liquid in hot, sterilized jelly glasses. These should be put near a sunny window in a room free from dust. The glasses should be covered with cheesecloth until the jelly has set."
"Large fruits, such as the apple, must be boiled in water until soft, and the liquid strained from the pulp before making the jelly. The heating of the fruit juice and sugar to the boiling point serves three purposes: To sterilize the material completely; to concentrate it to the proper consistency; and to invert, by the combined action of temperature and free acids, a large quantity of cane sugar, preventing the jelly from granulating."

"Precautions to be observed in jelly making are: Do not use iron or tin utensils; the fruit acids attack these metals and give a bad color to the finished product and affect the taste; the kettle should be porcelain lined or enameled, or of aluminum. Do not cook the fruit juice and sugar too long or the pectin will lose its gelatinizing power. Do not add too great a proportion of sugar or the jelly will crystallize. Hard boiling may also cause crystallization."
