SANDY CELEBRATES INDEPENDENCE DAY

SANDY, July 4.—Morning broke upon Sandy on the 4th without a sun, but in the early hours the small boy was busy with his firecrackers and brought it home to the ears of the drowsy village folk that this was the genuine old fashioned 4th of July.

The morning was cloudy and threatened rain, but at the appointed time the rigs began to gather for the parade. It is the universal opinion that this was quite one of the best Fourths Sandy has ever celebrated. The parade far eclipsed all previous ones. First came the finely decorated automobiles, then followed the float with the Goddess of Liberty. The Sandy school had a very pretty float. The Mt. Hood creamery conveying two of Clackamas county's fine Jersey cows with milkmaids attending and bearing a banner saying, "We sell cream."

Quite the most novel and timely joke of the season was a float bearing the very familiar term, "The Multnomah Central Railway." The float exactly fit the name. It consisted of an old, old fashioned stage with a driver on top, dragging a rig of "dummies," while behind was a two wheeled cart with a cask labeled, "hot air." On the second round, the "hot air" had disappeared so that there really was nothing left of that "South Sea Bubble," worthy of mention. There were other floats which space forbids to mention.

The officers of the Woman's club of Sandy appeared in a finely decorated carriage bearing the club's colors of orange and black with rows of marguerites down the back representing the American coat of arms.

Then followed a miscellaneous number of rigs and rough riders, and the entire parade moved with the music of the Sandy band, under whose auspices the splendid program was rendered.

The entire crowd then repaired to Meinig's grove and listened to the reading of the declaration of Independence by Angeline Canning, an oration by William Stone, and a number by the Ladies quartet.

After the noon hour were the events of sport. The races were well run, although the track was somewhat soft from rain on the previous day.

Last was an interesting ball game between Pleasant Home and Sandy, the former carrying off the prize of $25.00. Fireworks and a dance given at Shelley's hall completed a day of celebration long to be remembered.
