should not be. It will not if parents will enter into the work with feeling and spirit, determined to do everything in their power to aid their sons and daughters in acquiring an education; in becoming better men and better women, hence better citizens. The schoolroom door will always be gladly opened to a father or mother, who will be a well-wisher to the time.

Teachers are the commanding general and power in the rank and file as well as interest in the work, energy and determination, will insure success in their part. It should be the constant endeavor of a teacher to do better work than the district has ever known before. If this is borne in mind and striven for, results will be more satisfactory in every respect than are possible from a drifting, listless, unambitious course. Happily for the cause they represent, and for the community welfare, teachers may be depended on to labor earnestly and faithfully to make of a school all that it should be; all that the public expects of it. Help teachers in the performance of their tasks. They deserve it, and will welcome it from any source.

The welfare of the pupils of a school, the future men and women of the land, is the primary aim of our educational system. They are entitled to first consideration, always and in everything. It is for them that the schools are maintained; and it is for their benefit that they should be the best it is possible to provide. The result is worth all it will cost, and more. Adults have had, or are now enjoying, their day. Children are preparing for theirs, and should be assisted
