IN GRESHAM AND VICINITY

The battleship Oregon is on exhibition in the window of the city bakery. While it would attract attention anywhere it would scarcely withstand any severe bombardment from even a small boy, but it should be seen to be appreciated as it portrays the ability of our popular baker, Paul Hoetzel, in the art of building pastry into something original and attractive as well as toothsome.

Sunday's baseball game between the Gresham Athletic club and the Lincoln high school resulted in a score of 25 to 4, in favor of the high school. Next Sunday's game will be with the Overlands of Portland. T. J. Bain, a new arrival from Pendleton, has been signed up as pitcher for the Athletics. He is said to be some ball tosser and a better game is expected.

Although the auto factory building was practically finished more than a week ago there has been some work going on all the past week. The windows are being frosted about half way up, and other minor improvements are going on preparatory to installation of the machinery which will be placed in the building within a few more days.

Some extensive alterations are being made in the front of the moving picture theater by D. C. Ross, owner of the building. The ceiling of the alcove will be raised about four feet and a porch will be built over the sidewalk. The new arrangement will be attractive as well as allowing more space for show placards.

AT PICTURE SHOW

Being the eleventh story of "What Happened to Mary", produced in collaboration with 'The Ladies' World'.

Cast of Characters.
Mary Dangerfield.....Mary Fuller
Mr. Craig.....Charles Ogle
His Son.....Barry O'Moore
The Lighthouse Keeper's daughter.....Edna Flugrath
The Lighthouse Keeper.....Herbert Prior
Shipmates, passengers, etc., on train.

After being rescued in an unconscious condition by the lightkeeper of Martha's Vineyard, Mary's next concern is how to get off the island and back to New York. She knows now that Mr. Craig must have a powerful motive for trying to keep her out of the way.

The next day brings the supply boat to the island and Mary, after much intercession with the captain is allowed to get abroad and sail for the mainland. Meantime John Craig and his son, still aboard the schooner from which Mary had previously escaped, are consumed with impatience.

Suddenly a cry of fire runs through the ship and great volumes of smoke pour through the hatchway. The boat is a furnace. They lower the small boats and John Craig suddenly finds himself in an open boat on the bosom of the Atlantic. Several hours afterward they reach Martha's Vineyard greatly exhausted, only to discover that Mary had departed an hour before they arrived.

Craig hires a launch and gives chase. Mary reaches the mainland first and is conducted to the railway station where she boards a train for New York. Then Craig reaches the mainland, and, arriving at the station, learns that the train has just left. In desperation he hires an automobile and again a chase is on.

At Easton Junction, where Mary has to change cars, Craig manages to catch up with her, but Mary being in a crowd, he dares not molest her. He boards the same train and takes up a position several seats behind her. Now there flashes across Mary's mind a daring scheme. It is her only chance; she will try it. The train pulls into the station. She suddenly jumps up, leaves the car, and Craig tries to follow, but there are several passengers who have risen in the meantime, also to leave the car. While he is trying to push his way out to the platform, Mary manages to run the length of the car, board the other platform and disappear into the train she has just left. Craig, of course, thinks she is leaving the station with the other passengers and only discovers his mistake when the train is pulling out and he realizes that he has been outwitted by a slip of a girl called Mary.

Friday and Saturday, the great Johnson-Jeffries fight pictures will be shown.
