 A Pleasant Surprise.
 A very pleasant surprise was given Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Welling at their home on Monday evening, the occasion being their seventeenth wedding anniversary.
 Those present besides the Welling family were, Mr. and Mrs. Tarr, Mr. and Mrs. C. N. Powell, Mr. and Mrs. Welly Powell, Mr. and Mrs. Cavanaugh, Mr. and Mrs. Young, Mrs. Lee, Mrs. Richmond, Mr. MacKenzie, Conrad Hoecker, Misses Mary, Anna and Emma Hoecker, Mary and Althea Daniels and Gertrude Lee. The evening was spent in playing 500 and other games. About midnight a delicious lunch was served which had been provided by the ladies after which all departed wishing Mr. and Mrs. Welling many more happy anniversaries.
 Mrs. J. R. Cavanagh is attending grand lodge in Portland this week.
 Miss Elsie Calkins is home from Reed college where she has been attending school.

Short Story of Cotton and Some Cotton Goods.
 "Cotton is now our cheapest cloth, but it was not always so," says Mrs. Lullie Robbins, assistant professor of domestic science and art, O. A. C. Extension service. "Until we knew how to take out the many seeds, which cling tightly to the cotton in the ball or pod, cotton was expensive. A man, working hard all day long, could scarcely 'pick' a pound. But the invention of the cotton gin changed all that. Since that time cotton manufacture has been one of the greatest industries of our country."
 "Cotton from the field is packed in bales which weigh 500 pounds. In the United States these bales have a standard size of 54x27x27 inches. To make one bale requires 1600 pounds of seed cotton. The value of cotton depends upon its length of fiber, fineness, strength, color, and cleanliness. In the manufacturing process, the fibers are ginned, combed straight, drawn out, twisted, and finally spun into threads firm enough to make the various kinds of cotton cloth we see in the stores.
 "Calico, the cheapest cloth, was first made in Calcutt, India, a fact which accounts for its name. Its designs in colors are all printed on the cloth; such materials were once called 'prints.' Gingham is a plain weave the same as calico, but its colors are woven in on the looms. It also was first made in far away India. Percale is a printed cloth, but the weave is a little different; it is a firmer cloth than either of the others. Lawn is woven of light weight cotton thread; it gets its name from a city in France where it was first made. Its designs or colors are always printed and never woven."
