

GRESHAM OUTLOOK

GRESHAM, OREGON

Home and Farm Magazine Section

FRIDAY, JUNE 26, 1914

A Typical Field of Ripening Corn in the Northwest.

While corn is not grown very extensively in the Northwest, nevertheless farmers in some localities have found it a profitable crop. When thoroughly cultivated it may replace, every third year at least, the bare summer fallow land in parts of Oregon and Washington. It may be grown either for grain, fodder or silage, proving very valuable for the latter. When intended for fodder or silage the crop is planted much more thickly than if for grain.