Columbia Heights

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Reed entertained several friends on a trip by motor boat to Multnomah falls on Sunday. The day was perfect and the trip up the river was interesting and greatly enjoyed. It is almost impossible for any pen to give justice to the grand and gorgeous scenery along the Columbia, it must be seen to be appreciated. Mother earth at this place has received a big share of nature's wonderful work in the formation of lofty cliffs, waterfalls and caves, which before long can be seen via the Columbia Highway by people from all over the world. The tunnel at Oneonta gorge is now finished and the construction of several immense concrete bridges is a most beautiful piece of work as is also the stone wall built by the Italian masons, the first two automobiles came as far as Multnomah falls on Sunday via Latourell, the bridge at that place is almost ready.

RAISING OF INTAKE MEANS NEW BUILDINGS

The raising of the intake at the Bull Run headworks will necessitate the removal of the old frame cottages occupied by the city employes in charge of the plant for the reason that the water will spread over the ground they occupy. The buildings are cheap, and instead of removing them to higher ground, entirely new and more substantial lodges will be built. The contract was awarded to G. A. Thompson for $9580.

The source of Portland's water supply is to be shown in films at the Panama Pacific exposition next year. A motion picture operator employed by the Federal government returned Wednesday from the Bull Run headworks, where he procured several hundred feet of pictures. It is probable that after the film has been used at San Francisco the city will buy it.
