Entered as second-class matter March 3, 1911, at the Postoffice at Gresham, Oregon, under the Act of March 3, 1879.

ORGANIZATION AND CO-OPERATION.

The other evening the editor attended the manufacturers and Land Products show at the Armory in Portland. It was Wednesday night and happened to be Third-streeters' night. Hundreds of men and some women were present wearing on their hats or pinned on their coats a placard with the words "3d Streeters."

The storekeepers on that street a year or two ago discovered that trade was moving up town and they were losing out. Other streets were aglow with electric signs and crowded with people while Third street was deserted and dull.

The Third-streeters got together, faced the situation, decided to meet it. They agitated, contributed and brought about things to improve their street. Now many beautiful electric arches grace Third street, giving it a united and attractive appearance.

At the Land Products show were represented many counties and localities by creditable exhibits of products. Among others was a little city called Clatskanie, located about 40 miles down the Columbia from Portland. The exhibit was good but no better if as good as could have been gathered from Gresham. But there it was and it called forth much favorable comment and helped to impress upon the visitors the importance and enterprise of the locality.

Organization, co-operation, enterprise, publicity. These are big words in the commercial and industrial development of a city.

Where was Gresham? A careful search among all the literature being handed out, among all the exhibits, big and little, failed to show its place on the map.

We are in danger of being outstripped by other places which haven't naturally half so good a chance.

WILL IT BE DONE?

A short time ago the Outlook printed a story to the effect that an effort is being made at Washington to convert the rural free delivery system into a contract system, the plan having the support of the postmaster general.

The danger to the rural delivery of mail is not entirely imaginary.

The cry of economy is always popular in Washington. Many officials deem it to be their duty to make a saving in money without much regard to the manner of doing it, and some of those entrusted with the interests of the people might even go so far in their love of penny wisdom as to curtail the usefulness of the free delivery system.

It was said that the former postmaster general, Hitchcock, was in favor of changing the delivery of mail to the star route or contract method. The Oregonian four years ago said that most congressmen understood thoroughly that it means political death to the man who strikes it or favors any such change.

During the recent campaign every congressional candidate should have been sounded and pledged on this subject. Further the Oregonian said that "no work of the government means so much to the immediate welfare and happiness of the people. There is no service which returns so much for the money it costs and none for which the public so willingly pays taxes."

In general, economy is a desirable thing, but if the only way to lessen the expense of the government is to strike at rural free delivery, the sooner all thought of the subject is dropped the better for the welfare of the country and for the fortunes of the politicians.

The principal purpose of the post-office is to spread intelligence among the people. This duty should naturally be performed as in-expensively as possible consistently with the

the money will come easier in better ways; it wasn't directly for "saving souls," but many souls are near-being saved; it wasn't to capture the young people and straggle

It ought to pay its way if that is possible, and so ought the army and the courts, but in general it is not possible. As the greatest educational institution in the country, the postoffice must be expected, like the colleges, to present a deficiency now and then. The deficiency need not be so frequent as it has been, nor so large, but it is a thing to be expected.

MORE GOOD FELLOWSHIP NEEDED.

Down at the Methodist church last night (so to speak) they had a good old-fashioned social with warm friendly handshaking, neighborly goodwill and plenty of christian cheer. It was the kind that promotes the fellow feeling, brushes away the sordidness, brings the young people into closer touch with the church and makes everyone more ready to give to and attend the means of grace.

The strange thing about it, and what made it the more helpful in a spiritual way, was that it wasn't given to raise money for the preacher or anything of that sort. There were light refreshments but no charge. It wasn't for money, but

3 TEST. Under the auspices of all the churches of the town (if a hall big enough could be found), with singing, speaking and some fun, with a few five minute talks, possibly by some non-church member, on spiritual, moral and practical subjects, with a neighborly chat over a cup of tea and a piece of cake just a big christian fellowship meeting for everybody—would do more to "extend the kingdom", unite the churches and help the individual than some other methods which the common people are not much in sympathy with.

It should be shown that the churches belong to the community, that they desire to reach out the helping hand to every individual regardless of religious belief or station in life.

A. B. Conrad and E. B. Williams, two land owners whose names were mentioned in connection with the proposed extension of the Base Line road, requests the statement that they have not signed the petition for the extension and will not do so. The error was caused by an intended reference to his ownership of a considerable tract of land along the line of the contemplated improvement.

A MERRY HODGE-PODGE OF JINGLES AND POEMS

By EUGENE L. THORPE. According to a letter written many years ago by Henri Rochefort the statue of the Venus de Milo, whose arms are missing, held in her right hand an apple just received from Paris, and with her left hand slightly raised her dress, doubtless to show the judge her foot and ankle. But isn't it possible that the statue was made to represent Eve giving Adam an apple and getting a good ready to give him a kick also?

He—It was hard work to keep from kissing you last night. She—Well, you must be careful not to over-exert yourself, Jack.

The following lines in anticipation of a snow storm have just been received from the poet of the Johnson Creek Valentine factory with a request to publish.

When e'er a snowflake Leaves the sky It turns, and turns To say good-bye "Good-bye dear clouds, So cool and gray," Then lightly goes Upon its way.

When e're a snowflake Finds a tree, "Good day," it says, "Good-day to thee, Thou art so bare And lonely dear, I'll rest and call My comrades here."

But when a snowflake Brave and meek, Falls on a maiden's Rose-bloom cheek, It starts and says, "How warm the day, It must be summer," And melts away.

Mrs. Knowlton, Coon Hollow, writes me to know if "Army Hill" and "Navy Hill," of whom she has read so much are any relation to Juana Hill. She is respectfully referred to General Finser.

Almanac publishers are "the people" just now in the literary world, but somehow the book reviewers continue to give their productions the stony glare.

The following sage reflections are copied from the last issue of the Rockwood Rip-saw: A man who can say the right thing at the right time is never a bore—particularly if you are in need of a cigar.

"What's in a name?" is never considered if it's on the lower right-hand corner of a check. Babies must stand before they can walk, but that doesn't mean that they must stand on their heads.

toned up his coat, "and I would be pleased if any one tell me what I want to know." The crowd became interested at once. One fellow remarked that it would be easy if it referred to the twenty-nine amendments on the election ballots, as any schoolboy could answer him in that case. "Well" gentlemen, here is the problem, and the one that can answer it will be presented with all my old cigar stubs for a week. Once the world was not so full of people as it is now, in fact the proportion of live people to dead ones was as Adam's whole family to nothing. Now you know the time came when people began to die and there were more in existence than Adam's first family. As you are perhaps aware, there are now supposed to be more dead people than live ones. Now what I want to know is this: At what period of the earth's existence, between Adam's time and now, did the number of live people and the number of dead ones exactly counterbalance each other? The promised reward has not been claimed yet, and I think it never will be, at least not by me.

The following was heard on a corner just before election: Small boy—Pa, what is a bosom friend? Pa—One's most intimate friend. Small boy—Then do you take your friends to your bosom when you take them into a saloon? Pa—No, child. What on earth is the matter with you? Small boy—Well, ma says that's when you take your friends to booze 'em.

Ings—Do you believe in physical culture and the development of the limbs? Mollie—Yes, especially here in Oregon, where one can go out walking on rainy days for six months in the year.

There was a shortage of 10,000 in the Ohio vote at the last election. That number probably represents the men in Ohio who have given up all hope of becoming president and are feeling too sour to vote.

Waking, I gather From silence and night, The peace that I never Could win from the day; The sad spirit rather Retires from the light, Implores forever The daylight away.

The soul which is bounded By bond which it hates Still flies to the lonely Sad shades which are free; The heart which is evoked By loss of its mate To the night-shadows only For solace may flee.

And when the soft moonlight Is streaming around, When cutting the billow And sweet from the sea, The night-breeze takes flight With a murmuring sound— Then from their cold pillow Ascending to me.

Sweet spirits of sadness, Keep watch o'er my heart; The dark doubt is fleeing The moment they came The fear and the madness That vexed me depart; While Faith and Love meeting, Bring peace to my heart.

Thanksgiving Appeal for the Children.

It is sincerely hoped that every person having the welfare of The Boys' and Girls' Aid society of Oregon at heart will not fail to remember them this year. This society is caring for all the dependent and neglected children in the state who may be committed to it by the proper authorities. Their annual report is descriptive of some of the work they have accomplished, showing the society has received into its care 4378 children since its organization. During the past year 443 have been received from twenty-five different counties as follows: Baker, Benton, Clackamas, Clatsop, Crook, Coos, Columbia, Curry, Douglas, Hood River, Jackson, Josephine, Klamath, Lane, Linn, Marion, Multnomah, Malheur, Umatilla, Union, Wheeler, Wallowa, Wasco, Washington and Yamhill.

Another grand thing which the Society accomplishes is the investigation of complaints of abuse and neglect among children, and they quickly have an agent on the spot, and what otherwise would be nobody's business they make the business of this noble institution, and if there is merit in the complaint they see that the matter is brought before the proper authorities, and the children made such disposition of as may be for their best interests.

Therefore, one cannot donate anything for a better cause than for the work of this institution. Money can always be used to good advantage, and their needs are for everything that can be used in a household; canned goods, groceries of all kinds, especially sugar, rice, beans and flour, also vegetables and fruits of all kinds.

The railroad, steamboat and express companies running into Portland have recognized the importance of this institution sufficiently to send head all donations shipped to it if properly boxed and plainly marked "The Boys' and Girls' Aid Society of Oregon, Portland, Ore."

The results of the work of this institution can now be seen in many parts of the state. Many of the children have now grown into manhood and womanhood, many are happily married and the largest percent of the cases have turned out to be good and law abiding citizens; therefore, help the good cause along.
