The Local Dealer.

"The simplest type of middleman's service is that performed by the local dealer," says Dr. Hector Macpherson, professor of economics at the Oregon Agricultural College. "This local dealer may be nothing more pretentious than the huxster with his single horse and wagon, gathering a stock of farm products and peddling them from house to house. More generally, however, he is known as the local grocer, butcher, or flour and feed man, the man who buys farm products and retails them to city patrons. The service performed by these middlemen has been a great and necessary service to the farmer. We may travel from northern Alberta to Florida and find in every rural town or village the general store or the corner grocery handling the surplus of farm products and acting as a store house from which the rural community draws those household supplies which the farm cannot produce."

It is an advertised fact that the great mail order houses of Chicago will not sell anything to people in Cook county, nor within certain limits. It is obvious that they do not care to risk an inspection of their goods by their neighbors, nor sell in opposition to their home merchants.

A big plant for the screening and washing of sand and gravel will be installed at Roseburg in the near future. Several thousand dollars will be invested in machinery and buildings and side tracks connecting the works with the Southern Pacific railway will also be put in.
