

Keep Chickens Free From Pests

In keeping chickens free from pests both the care of the fowls and of the houses must be considered. The latter should be cleaned frequently and painted with white wash containing either carbolic acid or kerosene. The roosts, nest boxes and even floors and walls may be sprayed with a mixture of three parts kerosene and one part crude carbolic acid of 90 to 95 per cent strength. The mixture must be well stirred and applied with a hand spray or with a brush, says H. F. Wilson, Entomologist of the Oregon Station. This will destroy or drive away the young mites that get into the chickens at night. The birds are most successfully treated with some good lice powder.

There are a number of more or less successful brands on the market but a very satisfactory powder is made as follows: Mix three parts of gasoline with one part of crude carbolic acid as above, and add slowly, stirring all the time, enough plaster of paris to take up all the moisture, but no more. This makes a dry, pinkish-brown powder with a fairly strong carbolic odor and rather less pronounced gasoline odor. The powder is worked into the feathers of the bird infested with vermin.

There are some men we know who can't even tell the truth about themselves without exaggerating it.

Hens Made to Take Part in War. An article in a London paper states that hens, pigeons and crows are being trained to watch out for the aeroplanes of the enemy, as they have a keener vision than man can obtain, even with a telescope. The method of training is cruel like everything connected with the war. The birds are confined in a pen and a machine descends near them and a man belabors the fowls with a stick, hurting them badly and scaring them worse. This method is continued until the birds are continually on the watch skyward and if they see a tiny speck in the air they set up such a fluttering and screaming that attention is attracted to the aeroplane. So biddy has been compelled to take part in the great war as well as horses, dogs and men.

In the Barber Shop. It was in a suburban barber shop and a farmer with a week's growth of stubby beard had seated himself in a chair to have his whiskers cropped.

"Guess you'll have a time gittin' them off," he remarked as the barber began rubbing on the lather.

"Oh, I don't know," said the barber carelessly. "All beards look alike to me."

"Wunst I went into a barber shop to get shaved," resumed the farmer, "and after the barber was done and I was payin' him, he remarked: 'Say old man, if all beards was like yours I'd quit the barber business.' I sez to him, I sez, 'Well, you haven't got anything on me, old man. If all barbers was like you, I'd let my beard grow.'"

Oregon Stone Industry.

Hundreds of thousands of dollars of Oregon capital have been invested in the stone industry of eastern and western Oregon.

But the stone quarries have been lying idle while public buildings are erected from stone imported from Alaska and Indiana.

The Portland First National Bank to be built of stone by an eastern architect will probably find no Oregon stone good enough.

A Portland architect has been selected to erect the Monmouth State Normal school building and he has not favored Oregon stone in the past.

In the old days a fine building was erected at the Corvallis Agricultural college of Oregon stone from Lincoln county, but all recent buildings used imported stone.

The Yaquina Bay sandstone has been used on some of the finest buildings in Portland and San Francisco, and is being considered for two federal buildings in Oregon.

The average architect on a state or federal building seems to imagine he has done his duty by the state that give him employment when he turns down Oregon stone.

Most of them play into the hands of brokers and agents for imported building material and our federal and public officials are satisfied to let them.

With freak laws killing industries on one hand, and indifferent officials letting them die on the other Oregon is not developing anything but high taxes.—Pacific Coast Manufacturer.
