GETTING FROM UNDER.

A potent sign of the drift toward prohibition is the announcement of the Brunswick-Balke-Collender company, an extensive and exceedingly well managed corporation which makes the statement that it will suspend entirely the manufacture of saloon fixtures, which business has constituted one of its principal products as well as being a great source of income. It will devote the resources of its vast establishment to other purposes, for the announced reason that it believes the American saloon is about to be done for. There are, or soon will be, enough saloon fixtures for sale to supply the waning demand—a demand that leaves no profit to the manufacturer.

There is food for very serious, sober reflection in that conclusion and statement by such a firm. It is not the judgment of some sentimentalist to whom the wish is father to the thought; it is not an extract from the speech of some nation-wide prohibition advocate who knows no more about the question than his hearers, nor is it the maudlin saying of some campaign orator made for political purposes only. It is made by a company of substantial business men who have been closely associated in a business way with the saloon interests for years, by a cold-blooded corporation that banks on its judgment rather than its desires and whose judgment is based on a careful and systematic canvass of the situation.

BRYAN'S YELLOW STREAK.

A careful perusal of the opinions of several editorial writers and correspondents fail to reveal many words of praise or commendation over Bryan's defection in resigning from the president's cabinet. On the other hand there is an undercurrent of disgust at his apparent cowardice in leaving the situation at a critical stage when his services were needed and could have been useful to the president and people of the United States had he the backbone that is supposed to be one of the attributes of every American in public life.

Bryan's yellow streak has been apparent ever since he promulgated his "peace at any cost" doctrine. He seems to have no ulterior motives, nor policy that would be of benefit to the nation in its present difficulty; but rather a "get-from-under" feeling while he could do so with safety to himself. The American people are for peace but will not stultify themselves to the base attitude of cringing fear that seems to be the condition of Bryan's mind in dealing with the problems now confronting us.

Bryan's famous epigram, a "cross of gold and crown of silver" is now to be replaced by his "peace at any price" idea. The former gained him the nomination for the presidency; the latter has effaced him from any consideration in the minds of all patriotic people. To some he has been the "greatest American" since Lincoln, but he was shown in a reflected light, which once withdrawn has left only a skeleton. He, the president maker, builded better than he knew when he made Wilson president, and it is one of the ironies of fate that his handiwork has borne the test required of America's greatest men, and that he, himself, has been found to be only the dross from the crucible.

It has always been very hard for anyone to be neutral about Bryan.

Teddy has endorsed President Wilson's policy toward Germany, which is one thing that will make Bryan wish he hadn't done gone and done it.

At last accounts the Ford machine stolen from a Gresham citizen had not been found. Perhaps it wasn't stolen; someone may have tied a dog to it which the said dog mistook for a tin can and ran away down a dark alley.

KILLING PRIVATE LAUNDRIES.

Back East, in benighted Indiana, a "lazy husband law" has just gone into effect. Under that law all husbands must work and support their families. When a gay bachelor gives up his liberty he becomes automatically eligible for investigation as to his habits of industry and may be put to work by the state if he pauses to rest during the long journey that is before him from the altar to the grave. The law will serve to increase laundry bills at the public laundries, and help eliminate several other sources of private income on which a family may live, for many indispensable husbands have lived happily ever afterward in other states besides Indiana upon the bounty of wives who did not contemplate, even when the question was popped, the probability of being supported. But hereafter, in Indiana at least, that is all of the past.

How many washerwomen who support loyally and willingly an able-bodied hulk of a man whose greatest industry is the criticism of men and measures who are qualified under the ancient Athenian rule that those who worked for their living lacked leisure in which to study problems of government? What is to become of those ideal husbands if the Indiana example becomes contagious? Luckily for the Oregon husbands of private laundry proprietors our state legislature is nearly two years away.

Kitchen Waste. "Home making outranks all other trades in the number of persons employed, according to a bulletin issued by the United States bureau of education. Of the 31,000,000 females over 10 years of age in the United States 24,000,000 are engaged in home making. The bulletin lays emphasis on the fact that cooking is a scientific process and should be taught as such, especially in the new vocational schools being established."

SUMMONS. In the Justice Court for Multnomah County, State of Oregon, Plaintiff, vs. C. E. Colville and Mrs. C. E. Colville, Defendants. To C. E. Colville and Mrs. C. E. Colville, his wife, Defendants: In the name of the State of Oregon, you are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint filed against you in the above entitled action on or before the expiration of six weeks from the date of the first publication of this summons, to-wit: on or before the 1st day of July, 1915, and if you fail to appear for judgment against you for the sum of $17.85, for goods, wares, merchandise and necessaries, together with costs and disbursements herein; you are further notified that there has been attached for sale and satisfaction of the foregoing debt, together with interest and costs, the following personal property to-wit: 1 cook stove, 1 iron bed spring and mattress, 2 tables, 3 rockers, 4 chairs, 1 boiler and contents and roll of window shades, all being and situated in Gresham, Multnomah county, Oregon, to be held subject to the outcome of said action.

Where Trading is Second Nature. D. W. Cram, in charge of the school at Barron in Arctic, Alaska, the northernmost school in the world, says: "The Eskimo child differs from the average white child in that at an early age he is thrown upon his own resources as far as trading and bartering are concerned. Even at the time he enters school, and in some cases before that, he is allowed to do much as he pleases with whatever comes into his possession. For instance, there came into this harbor last fall, just before the close of navigation, a whaling schooner. One evening after school about a dozen of the boys, between the ages of 9 and 14, got into a native canoe and went over to the ship. The crew of the ship was composed mostly of Eskimos from Siberia. These schoolboys in some cases traded the very clothes they had on their backs, custom-made goods, shipped from Seattle in the summer time; hats, caps, coats, suspenders, shirts, undershirts, not to mention knives, much organs and various other articles, for things the Siberians had to trade. After it was all over they came back to the schoolhouse and during the evening hour entertained us with a recital of their experiences, laughing and joking at the deals they had made, and I could see that they had driven some shrewd bargains with the Siberians."

FINAL ACCOUNT. In the County Court of the State of Oregon, in and for Multnomah County. In the matter of the Estate of J. S. Otis, Deceased. Notice is hereby given that the undersigned as executor of the estate of J. S. Otis, deceased, has filed his final account of said estate, in the above entitled court; and that Saturday, the 26th day of June, 1915, at the hour of 2:15 o'clock a. m. of said day, at the courthouse at Portland, in said county and state, has been appointed as the time and place for the hearing of objections to said final account, and the settlement thereof. All persons having objections to said final account are hereby notified to present the same at such time and place. GEORGE BLACKBURN, Executor. MILO C. KING, Attorney for Executor. PLANTING IN THE MOON.

The agricultural experts the nation over are authority for the statement that one of the hardest fallacies with which they have to contend is that of popular belief among farmers generally that there is some mysterious connection between the moon and growing crops.

We must confess to a sneaking idea that, in this matter the farmers are right and the department sharps are wrong; for who doesn't remember how our farmer dads waited patiently for the moon to gain the right ascendancy before planting their seeds? They believed for all the years before agriculture became an exact science that planting "in the moon" was the proper paper. We do not profess to know just how or why we persist in the idea any further than that it is a fact which any old-time farmer still clings to—that the moon has an influence on many forms of vegetable life.

And while the government chaps argue wisely and well, we are willing to admit, we prophesy that it will take them a long, long time, with all their facts and figures and superior knowledge of the why and wherefore of things, to convince the old timers that the moon doesn't exert an influence over crops.

Who doesn't remember the early cucumbers that came on the first joint because the seeds were planted when the moon was one day old? Who would refuse to believe the stories told of planting certain vegetables in the light or dark of the moon? These are authentic cases, as every farmer knows, and we would suggest a crop expert to make a series of experiments on the experiment farms just for the purpose of disproving the moon theory or convincing the department that the farmers know when to plant crops that will get all the benefits of the moon's influence.
