

June 18 will be the centenary of the battle of Waterloo, the most famous battle ever fought. It has had an influence on all history since, more than any other battle. Even its name has become the symbol for the over throw of the domineering spirit. Another Waterloo is coming which will be a history-forming event.

Debt Tendency Must Be Checked.

The tendency throughout the country is clear. The American people are inclined to plunge deeper and deeper into debt. This trait, made conspicuous from the report of the census bureau, is sure to be reflected in higher taxes. The quicker the people, as a whole, come to realize what they are doing, the better for the present generation and for posterity.

The Washington legislature has submitted a constitutional amendment to limit debt and to limit the franchise at elections to those paying taxes.

In Oregon a law has been enacted limiting annual increase in tax levies to six per cent, except by special vote of the people.

A special bulletin of the United States Census Bureau shows that in 1913 the cities, villages, towns, townships, school districts, drainage, irrigation and levee districts, fire districts, poor districts, road districts, and all other minor divisions having power to incur debt, reported a net indebtedness of $2,475,954,353—an increase of $1,845,884,743 or 113.2 per cent, over the total for 1902. A small part of the increase is doubtless due to a more complete canvass in the later year.

People all over the state want to know why the Corvallis cannery is going to be shut down, located in the midst of a wonderful fruit and vegetable district, and in the home of the Agricultural College. It seems to be clearly a case of lack of scientific co-operation on the part of those really interested and a failure to utilize the natural resources and available forces of the community. It seems remarkable that with a large growers' association, with abundance of banking facilities and all the resources of the state college, that this industry should be allowed to perish. It certainly should be possible to get several hundred farmers in that territory to plant vegetables and small fruit sufficient to operate that industry.

WHAT CANNERIES ARE CONTENDING WITH
 The following will show what the canneries are contending with this year and why the packs will be very light. The prices quoted are on this year's pack with large steels left over from last year to work off. Added to this is the high price of sugar. Many canneries in Oregon and Washington will run very light this year if at all. The Forest Grove cannery put up a large pack last year and has a considerable quantity left over. It is reported their pack will be very light this year.

The Gresham cannery has orders for 1900 cases of loganberries and will pack some red raspberries, but the pack will not be very large in any line unless conditions materially change. Prices for canned goods in general are a great deal lower this year than formerly and sugar is nearly 50 per cent higher. Commenting on the new prices of the Central California canneries, as given in its opening price list, the California Fruit News says: "As compared with recent years this is a particularly early date for opening prices on California canned fruits. The Central has this year seen fit, however, to start the game instead of following the leader and has sprung something of a surprise in putting out a printed price list considerably in advance of what anyone else had anticipated doing."

"In addition the prices named are particularly low, so low, in fact, as to have caused considerable astonishment. Right down the list the prices are lower than the lowest, except in cherries, and while the prospect is for a rather cheap and plentiful supply of raw material this year and the large in several of the lines, at the same time with sugar practically 50 per cent higher than a year ago and with canners generally preparing to curtail their operations this year on account of the lack of export possibilities and the dull market in this line, it was not to be expected that prices would be as cheap as the Central has named them."

"The apparent object of the Central California canneries is to definitely find out what the jobbers will buy when given a price that comes very close to cost of production, to say the least. The volume of business which may come in under these low opening prices will give the company an idea of what packing policy it should adopt and give it a basis to work upon. In addition, any changes should be advances and little possibility of big discounts and cutting of prices a little later on to influence business, as it would seem if a large volume is not booked early at such prices as the Central has put out there is no sense in packing the goods."

When to Cut Hay for Making Best Product.
 "Cutting the crop at the proper stage for hay is important. If cut too soon, a light washy hay will result and if delayed past the proper stage, a coarse unpalatable and indigestible product. Cut clover when in full bloom and with one-tenth to one-third of the blossoms turning brown. For cows it may be cut slightly earlier. Cut alfalfa when coming into blossom, but better still watch the basal shoots at the crown of plant and cut when one to one and one-half inches long. This is your second crop coming on. Don't wait to cut until these are long enough to be clipped off. Vetch should be cut for hay when first seeds appear in pods. If growing with grain, the grain should be in milk or soft dough stage."

These are the views of J. E. Larson, Agronomy Extension specialist of the Oregon Agricultural College, on the best time to cut hay. Mr. Larson continues as follows:
 "Grasses are cut usually at, or just before blooming time; the rye grasses should be cut before blooming as they become woody; timothy for market hay at blooming time. It does not deteriorate so rapidly and may be allowed to pass bloom before cutting; red top also can stand slightly longer in field than rye or oat grasses."
 "Grain hay (oats, wheat, etc.) should be cut just between milk and soft dough stage for best quality. Many try to get grain and hay both. What is gained in grain is more than off-set by what is lost in the hay or forage. The nutrient is in the stalk and forming grains at the soft dough stage and passes rapidly into the grain as it nears ripening. It will pay to cut the grain hay at the proper stage."
