The Farm Wife

There is no class of women more deserving of respect than the farm wife, although too often she is regarded as second to the club women.

The latter may know a great deal about literary matters but very little about her husband's business.

Not so the woman on the farm.

The farm wife knows more concerning her husband's business than any other man's wife knows about his.

She has a fairer, clearer and more helpful understanding of it than the average lawyer's, doctor's or merchant's wife can possibly have about her husband's business, for she lives and works with her husband on their "plant."

The farmer's partner in more senses than one. In the majority of cases she actually operates one on more of the departments of the business.

Most wives have genuine interest in and some information about their husband's business, but the farmer's wife, living with her partner on the plant, occupies a unique position among all wives.

With this greater opportunity for helpfulness than her city sisters, her responsibilities have increased proportionately. All honor and respect to her who carries this heavier burden.

Cured of Indigestion.

Mrs. Sadie P. Clawson, Indiana, Pa., was bothered with indigestion. "My stomach pained me night and day," she writes. "I would feel bloated and have headache and belching after eating. I also suffered from constipation. My daughter had used Chamberlain's Tablets and they did her so much good that she gave me a few doses of them and insisted upon my trying them. They helped me as nothing else has done."
