READING THE ADS.

The man who never reads the newspapers is the sort whose head was made merely to grow hair on. Not to read the newspapers these days is not to live in the world, but to vegetate in mental squalor. And to skip the ads in the paper is to save time at the expense of money. What would you think of a broker who never reads the stock reports? Or a merchant who never reads the price lists and discount sheets? Or of a miller who never reads the grain quotations? You would expect such men to hurry pell-mell into bankruptcy.

But why should the brokers and merchants and manufacturers read the quotations printed in their interest and the consumer of merchandise refuse to read the quotations printed in his interest? It is of as much concern to the consumer to save a dollar in buying from the retailer as it is for the retailer to save it in buying from the wholesaler, or the latter from the manufacturer. But the consumer is too often disposed to express a grandiloquent indifference to retail prices, hence he pays the top prices. And if he buys on credit and pays irregularly, the chances are that he helps to pay the bills of some who do not pay at all.

In this country most of the household shopping is done by the wife and mother, and to woman's credit be it said that she is usually a good buyer. If the wife is thrifty and well posted, if she takes advantage of the real bargains when they are offered and makes her money extend itself to the limit, the family ordinarily is prosperous. But if she is incompetent or indifferent or indolent or inclined to pose importantly before shop girls and take pride in her charge account, the family usually will be in constant financial straits and habitual bad humor.

In other words, if you are a retail buyer, and do not read the ads, probably you are not measuring up to your responsibilities, and probably your family suffers through your own remissness.

NATIONAL DEATH RATE

Science is decreasing the death rate in the United States for people under forty years of age and the national health bureau is unduly alarmed over the fact that the death rate for those over forty years is increasing.

These facts should be of the greatest interest to insurance companies as they could increase their profits by refusing to insure men over forty years old. But it might also interest the learned savants of the national health bureau to learn in the course of time that, since all men must die, the death rate cannot be increased for those below any given age without increasing it for those above.

There is only one way in which to cut down the mortality of men from forty upwards, and that is to have more of them die below that age, say in childhood and youth.

The health bureau also views with misgivings the increase in the number of deaths from organic heart trouble and other bodily ailments which are usually restricted to men of advanced age. Of what would they have them die? Medical science and knowledge of right living have saved many children to a ripe age.

There are more elderly men in the world, in proportion to the total population, than there were forty years ago. Naturally they do not die of cholera infantum or croup. The diseases of age and maturity must claim more victims.

The very facts, therefore, which alarm the wise men at Washington are in reality a token of the betterment of human health. They should reduce their conclusions to their ultimate ratio in order to see how needless is the alarm they are causing. The death rate above forty might be reduced to nothing, and deaths from heart ailments to practically none, by killing all human beings before they should reach the age of two score. And the death rate above forty and the number of deaths from organic diseases might be immeasurably increased if all children could be brought to years of maturity.

The high pressure of living has much to answer for, but the manner of living is generally more rational than it was in the past. Constant education along lines of temperate living have produced an effect which is none the less forceful although obscured by the centering of attention on infraction of national health laws.

The decreasing death rate below forty will account in some measure for the greater increase of deaths from cancer and tuberculosis. So what has been heretofore the despair of health scientists may have its solution in the fact that more people live to be past forty than before the increase of cancer and tuberculosis was noticed.

ABOUT CROQUET

With the passing of modesty and sentiment and the many other quiet things of life, goes the old peaceful game of croquet of our happy, younger days. When those of us who have long since passed the halfway post of life pick up the newspapers and turn to the sporting page we note the space and prominence that is given to lawn tennis and golf it is then our memories sadly revert to the old happy, romantic days when croquet was in its prime and our hearts were young and life seemed full of promise.

What pleasant associations are entwined with the dear old game! How vividly we can see the bright faces of those now grown old or long since departed as they indulged in the gentle sport under the shady boughs. Alpaca coats, round cuffs, sidewhiskers, high coiffures, bangs, bustles and garters, merry laughter and the spicy odor of hairoil overhanging all! Such deportment! What gallantry! The most harmless slips of the tongue brought forth abundant blushes. What a scene it was!

The game of croquet does not appeal to the mad man. It fails to interest the high-pressure minds of the high school kids or the busy business people nowadays. There is no attraction in it for the muscle-bound and over strenuous. It never gets in the newspapers. It takes you into the open without removing you miles from your business. It can be played without disguise. It appeals to the sober and mild. What can be more cooling and refreshing than a quiet, respectable game of croquet in the confines of one's own home, far from the war bulletins and the noisy clatter of the money-getters and the score boards?

Bring on the banquet and let's hear what ex-President Taft has to say about our country's preparedness for war. He will be in Portland this week.

We wonder if a giraffe's neck would grow longer if it were fertilized.

D. C. LEWIS AND THE REVIEW

The Outlook is in receipt of a copy of the Peninsula Review, which was formerly the St. Johns Review, the change in name becoming a necessity due to the Lewis Merger act that increased Portland's population about 7000 and killed two city governments those of St. Johns and Linnton. The Review's field of usefulness has evidently been increased and we hope the people on the Peninsula will realize this and give it their hearty support.

We congratulate the Review on its enlarged field and Mr. Lewis on his success in enlarging the city of Portland by the merger act. Mr. Lewis was very active in the last legislature and did good work. He aided in improving the Workmen's Compensation Act and struggled for the passage of a measure equalizing taxes, which reform will come some of these days.

He voted and worked for the bill making taxes payable twice yearly, though he even favored the payment of taxes three times a year, but the sentiment for the three payment system was lacking.

We need more such men as Mr. Lewis in the legislature and it is not too early to suggest that he ought to run again for State Representative.

It is said that Ben Franklin's prospective mother-in-law objected to him as a prospective suitor for her daughter's hand on the ground that he was in an overcrowded business and would be unable to support a wife. Ben was a printer and newspaper publisher then—one of six in all of North America. Today there are more than 25,000 newspapers in the United States, and new ones are appearing daily. The mother of the future Mrs. Franklin was evidently neither an optimist nor a prophet.

Congressman C. N. McArthur announces that he has a limited supply of Farmer's Bulletin No. 666, by the United States Department of Agriculture, on the subject of "Foot and Mouth Disease." This bulletin contains information of value to live stock breeders, and copies will be furnished to all residents of Multnomah county who desire them as long as the supply lasts. Those who wish copies of the bulletin should address a communication to Mr. McArthur's office, 916-17 Yeon Building, Portland, Oregon.

When the state goes dry next January, it would be well for the hard drinker to provide himself with a gallon of his favorite brand and turn it over to his wife. Every time he needed a drink he should pay her 15 cents. When the first supply is gone she would have eight dollars to put in the bank and enough to buy him a new supply, each gallon averaging sixty drinks. In ten years at that rate the man would be dead and the woman would have enough money on hand to go out and marry a decent man.

Seven tall men of Shenandoah, Ia., bombarded the city authorities in an effort to have some overhanging tree branches removed so that they could keep their hats on and not lose their tempers. Their efforts met with instant success. The tall men of the Gateway City might well form a club of walking flagstaves and get like results.

The German contention is that the submarine was invented after the international laws were enacted. So was the automobile, but no chauffeur has a moral right to run over an old man who can't get out of the way.

In Cochon, China, the inhabitants prefer rotten eggs to fresh ones. Perhaps some of the Chinese eggs sent over here were intended for home consumption but got switched off to the wrong destination.

Patsy Boliver, Barney Futsur, Jimmy Sullux and Hank Doobuster were threshing guests at the Lynchpin farm last Saturday and report some great eats prepared by Sukey Sizwheel.

There isn't much difference between Bryan and Roosevelt. One speaks under a canvas and the other writes for a fifteen-cent magazine.

A peculiar thing was noticed in a Gresham home the other day. The woman of the house took a clock up stairs and straightway it ran down.

If this country keeps on sending ambulances to the European belligerents there won't be any left for the football season.

Mr. Bryan denies that he will be seen in the movies, but nobody will be surprised to hear him in the victrolas.

There's no stopover on a roasting ear.

Not So Strange After All
You may think it strange that so many people are cured of stomach trouble by Chamberlain's Tablets. You would not, however, if you should give them a trial. They strengthen and invigorate the stomach and enable it to perform its functions naturally. Mrs. Rosie Rish, Wabash, Ind., writes, "Nothing did me the least good until I began using Chamberlain's Tablets. It is decidedly the best medicine for stomach trouble I have ever used." ## A Pointer

"A word in time saves nine."

Think what it will be worth to you to have the right information at the right time. It only costs a little to keep track of events, local and world-wide, and then you are prepared when the time comes. The money spent in any of these combinations is well spent.
