A LAWYER'S ADVICE.

A front-page story today deals with the efforts of a conscientious lawyer to prevent a couple from being divorced, the woman in the case seemingly being the one who wanted to be free that she might tie herself up again with another man.

The attorney was evidently not inclined to earn a fee, neither was he an ethical lawyer in that particular case, for he seems to have given advice where none was sought. Yet he seems to have had faith in the intellect of his client to understand that he was directing her steps aright—as indeed he was, although with much verbosity and apparent seriousness that some persons would take as a joke.

The letter to the woman is not given in full, but in that portion which is given the lawyer's faith appeals to the heart as well as the intellect. Its object is not to inculcate a set of abstract truths, but to convince the woman that it is "meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints of light."

Among the changes and trials of this lower world we are to exercise our hope and patience—the grace of God being our strength—the prizes of eternity, the rewards to which we look forward. Thus, as this life wears away, we shall feel that we are going on from "conquering to conquer"—mastering the evil of our natures—and, by self-denial and self-discipline fitting ourselves to be true men and virtuous women.

It was to produce this result that the letter was written and sent. It is to be hoped that it fulfilled its mission.

CARANZA THE WINNER.

Support of the United States and the Pan-American countries will be given to Caranza in an effort to end the war of rebellion and bloodshed in Mexico which began four years ago with the assassination of President Madero.

Caranza has apparently satisfied this country and the A. B. C. people that he is able to take care of the situation. At least it appears that Caranza is to have a chance to make good his declaration that with the support of the governments of the two Americas he can restore order.

Other evidence from Mexico indicates that Caranza's power is becoming stronger. Some time ago he sent word to followers of Villa and Zapata that if they would lay down their arms and espouse his cause they would be pardoned for being rebels. Four Zapata generals have already surrendered to Caranza's forces and allied themselves with the cause now most in favor. Villa has apparently lost control of his troops. According to reports they have devoted themselves to devastating the country and outraging the inhabitants. If this state of affairs continues much longer Caranza will no doubt find himself the leader of a popular movement against the bandits, and Villa will be forced to seek refuge beyond the borders of his country.

With Caranza looming large, the question that puzzles students of the crisis is this: What part of the Caranza boom is inspired by the strength of the leader himself, and what part is the work of powerful forces that have fixed on him as an accommodating instrument?

Caranza is not a dominating personality in the sense that Diaz was. In some respects his views seem more nearly in accord with the views entertained in this country. He believes, for instance, that the hope of the Mexican people is in education. He has sent about a hundred students to the United States to stay here until they have fitted themselves to duplicate our school system in Mexico. This policy is somewhat different from that of any other Mexican leader. If Caranza's supporters are with him in this attitude, then there is hope for Mexico. If they are merely using him to discourage intervention on the part of a foreign power, in order that they may have an uninterrupted opportunity to hatch a plan to restore government according to the principles laid down by Diaz, there will be another story to tell, for Diaz' policy was might-by-right.

MARKETING AN IDEA.

When a real idea pops into the heads of the rather young, fairly intelligent and easily pleased people of this world when engaged in a confab or jumble of gossip they pounce upon it, pull it to pieces and put it together again, toss it back and forth between them and enjoy it so thoroughly that the poor little idea gets quite a brilliant polish and sparkles quite brilliantly.

How they do enjoy it, a real idea, one of the rare things these days when ideas are hunted for by every paragon and dragged about from one newspaper to another in every sort of different dress and disguise! These ideas are frequently found in the high schools and the students enjoy them so much because they are of no use to them at all. The boy or girl may say very grandiloquently: "That's a good one. Believe I'll write it up." But it is never written by the high school student. It gets to the ear of the newspaper writer and adds to his growing fame.

It is the same way with an idea as it is with anything else. As long as it is fun it is a commercial asset with the paragrapher and he will exploit it to the best of his ability. There is nothing else to be got out of it. The ordinary humorist gets little fun out of his own ideas. It is those that he picks up in the byways that tickle him.

To be sure there is a genius now and then who seems to possess a regular flowing well of ideas, but he is rare and more frequently he is only a good observer or good listener. The ordinary humorist has to wait patiently between ideas, and when one comes he must make the most of it. His only pleasure in it is in knowing that it will fill just so much space in the newspaper. To be sure, there may be a generous sort of pleasure in the realization that other people are going to enjoy it the way it is written.

There may be, too, a certain satisfaction in knowing what to do with an idea when it is caught, basted and done up brown, but it is nothing to the despair of not knowing what to do with one that is unprintable, and the system of dressing up the commonplace ones become so monotonous that one can't always be sure that he knows an idea when he gets one.

It is noticed that practically every newspaper in the state is advertising the land products show free of charge; it is also remembered in Gresham that not one of them, even in Portland, gave the Multnomah county fair more than a passing notice except at full rates, but the Outlook.

There are two sides to every question, but inasmuch as we are not interested in the other side and the public would not understand our side we shall not explain either of them. There, isn't that clear, and a lot of trouble staved off?

Willie Hearst's string of papers has a Sunday syndicate story about "Control of Babies by the Government." We wonder if the government would undertake to keep a normal baby from putting its toe in its mouth!

Gosh! Just think what a monster crop it would have been had the U. S. government reports said that the nation had raised 24,209,272,000 gallons of corn this year! That is what the corn crop would produce.

It is reported that sugar will go up again, but it is inconceivable now that the canning season is over. Perhaps the sugar trust is thinking about that threat of keeping the duty on awhile longer.

It is pleasant to have the memory of having been a congressman for four years, but the memory that will seem misty is the one that brings up the face of the girl that married a man in the navy.

As the nights grow longer there is an added incentive to throw your shoes at the alarm clock just when you want another nap and daylight hasn't peeped over the eastern mountains.

The cantaloupe and watermelon season may be getting away but the pig-knuckle-and-sauer-kraut season is just coming on to even things up a little.

"Dress-up" week has undoubtedly been a great success so far. It got everybody into his glad rags at least once, even if that once was on Sunday.

It's lucky that Hallowe'en didn't come this week. It would be embarrassing for a celebrant to be mistaken for someone else.

Old friends are the best, because in the natural course of events they are not likely to live as long to borrow from you as young friends are.

Greece doesn't seem to be any more enthusiastic about going to war than we do.

HONOR TO JOAQUIN MILLER.

It is reported that a tablet commemorating the birth of Joaquin Miller was unveiled at Liberty, Ind., on Sunday last, which was the poet's birthday anniversary. The tablet is of bronze, imbedded in a large boulder taken from the farm in Union county on which Miller was born. It now rests in the courthouse square at Liberty and is the first monument to be erected to his memory.

The tablet bears a likeness of the dead poet and a verse which, if not Miller's best, at least expresses his philosophy as he found it exemplified in the west, where he rose to fame and where he spent the greater part of his life. It reads:

In men whom men condemn as ill, I find so much of goodness still; In men whom men pronounce divine I find so much of sin and blot, I hesitate to draw the line. Between the two where God has not, It may not be amiss to call attention again to the fact that this is the first monument to Joaquin Miller. It is true that he lived many years in California and died there, but he wrote his first poetry in Oregon and published his first volume here, and was claimed by Oregon as one of her famous men. Yet where is his monument either in Oregon or California?

Those expert girl coil trainers of the Wild West shows will regret—later on in life that they failed to become expert trainers of six-cylinder self-starters.

A man in Seattle who doesn't know who he is has been taken into custody. That's not the way to enable a man to locate himself. Let him run for office.

If you have no home and desire a divorce and have no grounds you can make a lot and then you will have a place for a home and won't want a divorce.

It happens sometimes, in affairs not national, that one is watchful when he is not disposed to do much waiting.

Just because we were dressed up twice this week is no indication that we had a cent up on the Bostons.

There is no need to mention anything about Philadelphia's trance condition. It hasn't woke up yet.

Some of us rest on our laurels; the remainder have to work for a living.

Boston "culture" was represented on the scoreboard.

THE THINKER.

Back of the beating hammer, By which the belts that sing, Back of the workshop's clamor, The seeker may find the Thought, The Thought that is ever master Of iron, steam and steel, That rises above disaster And tramples it under heel! The drudge may fret and tinker, Or labor with lusty blows, But back of him stands the Thinker, The clear-eyed man who knows, For into each plow or sabre, Each piece and part and whole, Must go the Brains of Labor, Which gives the work a soul!

Back of the motor's humming, Back of the belts that sing, Back of the hammer's drumming, Back of the cranes that swing, There is the eye which scans them, Watching through stress and strain, There is the Mind which plans them— Back of the Brawn, the Brain!

Might of the roaring boiler, Force of the engine's thrust, Strength of the sweating toiler, Greatly in these we trust, But back of them stands the Schemer, The Thinker who drives things through.
