CHILDREN'S INSTITUTIONS.

Until Judge Cleeton became the head of the juvenile court in Portland it was not considered that there is a disposition to look upon an organized charitable institution as anything else than a society which would do little more than furnish food and shelter for the children in its care. Of education there was little if any, and the home atmosphere in which a child is said to be happiest was wholly lacking.

The state or county or private organization which undertakes the care of a child undertakes something which, at best, it can do but ill. Judge Cleeton has devised the plan of having them adopted by responsible people and the plan is working for the children's good so far. It is to be further commended for the saving of many thousands to the taxpayers.

The Frazer Detention Home is a necessary institution, but Judge Cleeton is supplementing its usefulness by the more humanitarian work of finding real homes for the boys and girls who are so unfortunate as to be sent there.

FURNISHING THE HOUSE.

Only a few years back—say thirty or forty—a young man rarely thought seriously of matrimony until he saved up a few dollars and was able to start out on the sea of matrimony on an even keel. He may have had the girl picked out of the bunch he met at the picnics, and perhaps he dreamed of her by night and in some way found out the size of her engagement finger.

Sometimes when there was a mute understanding between two loving hearts that some day they would show the world that it wasn't altogether a case of puppy love, the male would build a modest cage for his bird, and equip it with the necessary utensils for breakfast before making a direct offer to the female to come and cook his breakfast for him.

If all went as he had planned they started off ahead of the old shoes and the rice, and all the bride had had to do after rubbing the preacher's kiss off was to put on a gingham apron and fall in. In these days of prosperity the idea of both seems to be "get spliced and hustle afterward," and sometimes the idea backfires and the male takes the female home to the old folks while he does the hustling alone.

Through the grace of the installment houses the young man with one good suit of clothes and a salary of twelve dollars per, can take the plunge in the sea of matrimony whenever the idea strikes him—several times in fact for divorcees are easy. He scents danger in delay when affairs of the heart are concerned, for many a romance has been withered in being held up; and besides, why should a young and loving couple wait for years until fortune has smiled on one and a hungry, anxious expression has come over the face of the other? Why should they wait when they can begin housekeeping tomorrow with a fireless cooker and a phonograph.

We who are closing up our earthly accounts will be supplanted by the installment couple of this generation who can never recall the cruel hardships of the pioneer days. In the days to come the bride of today will tell her grandchildren about the thrilling visits of installment collectors, instead of the blood-curdling stories of Indians, as she struggled to keep up the payments on her Victrola and refrigerator. Maybe she'll sigh as she looks at the crayon portraits on the wall and remember back to the time when she had to go to grandma's once a week for a square meal. Her early installment life will then be the memory of a horrid experience.

But one good thing about the installment plan is that it simplifies matters when a young couple gets discouraged and decides to split the blanket. There is no long drawn out litigation over the possession of the household goods. The installment house takes care of that part of the program. But if there is really anything in a young husband the installment plan will bring it out. Even his cash.

Dr. Waite, who poisoned his father-in-law, says he has a dual personality and that it was his other self that dished out the poison. The law, however, will electrocute both of him.

If that pencil famine materializes it will be embarrassing in some respects but it would put a stop to the crippled pencil peddlers and leave the shoestring nuisance a monopoly.

It is reported from Nebraska that Mr. Bryan is trying to split the democratic party in that state wide open. We'll take all bets against him.

And now a little discrimination on the part of those April showers will be a great help to the people who are trying to get things planted.

FINDING STAR BOARDERS.

A new feature has been introduced in the Gresham school by Principal McCormick which is going to be of as much benefit to the dairymen and cow owners as to the boys engaged in the experiments being carried on.

Last week eleven samples of milk from as many neighborhood cows were tested by the boys of the eighth grade with a Babcock tester loaned by Theodore Brugger. The tests showed a wide variation in butter fat, ranging from one and two-tenths to seven and one-tenth per cent. As Professor McCormick has stated, the cow owners will know hereafter which are their "star boarders."

John Zak, a checker expert of Wampum, Pa., for the last six months has been playing a contest by mail with a crack player of Pasadena, California. Each player making a move, and then mailing the board back to his opponent. As it takes nine days for the mail to travel, the progress of the game is slow.

Our idea of burning up newspaper space is to publish plate cartoons that leave a fellow guessing as to whether the space box is empty or the printers "jeffing" for near beer.

Forty-three men of the Princeton senior class testify that they have never kissed a girl, etcha none of 'em ever lived in a country town, especially in Oregon.

The lonely wife who imagines her husband never praises her ought to hear him brag on her cooking when he is forced to eat a "ham and" at the lunch counter.

Well, even if the Giants did lose the game last Sunday, it was probably because of the threatened rain. Even at that it was a mighty pleasant reason.

When a man's conscience pesters him considerably he seldom spends any money on it. As a rule its his stomach or liver that rushes the can to the drug store.
