COLUMBIA HEIGHTS

Crown Point Chalet was a merry scene last Thursday evening when Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Keats of the Keats Auto Company of Portland, gave a birthday party for their only daughter, Mildred, who had reached her 13th year. The party arrived by 9 o'clock and immediately took possession of the beautiful ballroom. Miss Mildred's guests numbered eighteen of her most intimate friends. Dressed in a pink silk frock she made a charming little hostess, and as a fancy dancer she attracted much attention. But possibly the most interesting part of the evening came when the young folks took their places at the banquet table which was elaborate in every detail. At the end of the table was a beautiful birthday cake with thirteen lighted candles, which Miss Mildred very gracefully carved, and by the looks of everything the party just had the time of their lives and when the time came to leave for Portland, Miss Keats received congratulations and many compliments for the charming manners in which she had entertained her friends. The party was chaperoned by Mr. and Mrs. Keats and several prominent matrons of Portland.

The Louisiana state board of education has put its foot down on Mother Goose rhymes, throwing out a reader series because of these ditties in them. Ex-Governor Hall and other prominent members, who are plantation born and reared, thought they belittled the farmer. Superintendent of Education Harris and other members of the board fought valiant for the rhymes, but were outvoted.

Gary Plan in New York.

The introduction of the Gary system in a few schools of New York was generally viewed by educators as a distinct relief from crowded schools and insufficient equipment. There is now, however, some criticism of the system and considerable opposition to its extension. Teachers, naturally, are not overfriendly, because the system imposes longer hours with no additional remuneration. The plan also has been criticised because advantages that it was feared that the schools would suffer by scamping. Several details of operation have also been the subject of criticism, and lately a religious question has added to the complication.

William G. Wilcox, a member of the board of education of New York city, defends the Gary plan in an article in the American city. Most of the objections against it, he points out, are not directed against the plan itself, but against some feature of it in its application to New York city. When William Wirt went from Gary to New York, he found that playgrounds, classrooms and auditoriums were used only a small part of each day. All of the students, or the major part of them, used a certain part of the school equipment at the same time, with the result that the classroom, or playground, was crowded at such hours and entirely unused at others. He evolved a plan by which the pupils used the school equipment at different hours. The maximum use was obtained from it, and there was no congestion at certain hours. Mr. Wilcox defines the Gary plan as "the use of academic classrooms by two alternate classes, and the introduction of other activities to give variety and added interest to their school life."

In the application of this principle there is, of course, room for wide variation. Mr. Wirt made a suggestion that the outside activities include a stop by the children on their way home from school for religious instruction at such church as their parents might elect. This was the cause of strong opposition to the Gary plan by persons who obtained the idea that the religious feature was an integral part of the system. In answer to the objection that the schools would be starved under the Gary plan, Mr. Wilcox points out that economy was not its prime purpose, but a secondary advantage. The real purpose of the plan is to get the maximum use of school equipment and to provide richer educational opportunities for the pupils.

Wednesday a surprise was given Mrs. B. A. Gifford by old time neighbors from Portland, who motored out in the morning with well filled lunch baskets, books and flowers, took possession of the home and had a most enjoyable time. In the party were Mrs. David Stearns, Mrs. H. L. Walter, Mrs. I. D. Boyers and Lloyd Stearns.

From communications received at the St. Johns consulate, it is evident that the impression still prevails in many parts of the United States that a passport is needed to enter Canada. Such is not the case, however, American tourists are free to come and go, and no restrictions are imposed.
