Violets vs. Real Estate.

The city woods has become so accustomed to being surveyed and platted and divided and subdivided and to having first one part and then another made over into proper city lots with houses on them, that they are not nearly so proud or sensitive as they used to be. Nevertheless, it was a source of satisfaction when the violets got the better of the real estate men, and the harmless amusement the city woods enjoyed that Sunday afternoon went a long way toward compensating them for the fact that at last the cement walks and the "for sale" signs had penetrated into their more secluded and best loved spot, the hillside where the maidenhair fern grew and where the red bird and the brown thrasher lived.

The lots that had been made out of that particular remnant of the city woods had been extensively advertised. The violets had not been advertised at all. Naturally enough, the real estate men sat on the porch of the small building which had been built to look like a bungalow and to serve as an office, and watched the coming of the people, pleased in the assurance that they were responsible for the approach of every automobile and every baby carriage. Moreover, these same real estate men went out with their plats and lead pencils and tape lines in their hands, and met those who came to the city woods. Very proudly and hospitably they met them, smiling at them from a considerable distance and saying "good afternoon" as pleasantly as could be imagined. It is easy to see that everything would have gone very well if it had not been for the violets.

Nobody knows how many of those lots might have been sold that afternoon and nobody knows how many prospective homes were lost that afternoon on account of those violets. For the peculiar people had no sooner glimpsed the flowers that were purpling the grass in the most surprising profusion than they forgot all about boundaries and sites and views and everything else that they had come out to see. What did a lot matter to them? They had to have those violets. To be sure, there were many who had never had any intention of buying a lot, and a few who had come on purpose to pick violets, as they had come every other year, but even those who drove up in cars and started in pointing out the spots they would prefer no sooner saw the rest busy on their knees among the violets, than there they were as busy as any of them.

Of course, it was a bit hard on the real estate men, and if they had thought about it they might have had the violets all picked and have sold them along with the lots. The important thing about it all was, however, that the city woods had proved their power. They could cut them up and pave and fence them and sell them, but for the moment the woods were supreme, the woods and the violets. And it was as harmless a bit of pleasure as they could have had, because the people that picked the violets are all the more certain to come back again another day and it is very likely that in the end the violets will help the real estate men sell their lots.

Chinese Traditions.

That the average citizen of China cares nothing for the form of government under which he lives as long as he feels that it is secure is the opinion of Liang Shih Yi, sometimes called "the brains of China," director of the Chinese maritime customs and ardent champion of the monarchical form of government. In an interview printed in the New York Times he states that for 5,000 years the tradition of China has been that of a monarchy, and that the people do not want it tampered with, fearing an era of insecurity which might invite invasion on the part of a better organized country. While there is no connection between the church and state, he declares that the reasons for a monarchy are essentially religious. It is the religious system of morality and philosophy, rather than the patriotism of the people, which has held the country together. In Confucianism, he explains, there are four principals and five relationships. Loyalty to the sovereign, filial piety, honor and righteousness are the four leading principles which are drilled into most of the inhabitants from their early childhood. Second to these, but scarcely less important, are the five principal relationships—of ruler and subject, parent and child, husband and wife, elder and younger brother, and friend. The keystone of the whole system is loyalty to the sovereign, and, according to Liang Shih Yi, if this is removed, the whole structure will collapse and Chinese life will be thrown into a state of chaos. It is admitted that in educated nations this might not be a serious menace to the welfare of the nation, but the Chinese are ignorant, and if deprived of this ethical foundation, they would have nothing to turn to. They know nothing else and there is no way of teaching them. This argument for a monarchy comes at a time when China seriously needs something to brace her up.

With the southern provinces in rebellion, the western, which are especially religious, clinging to the old customs, and the common people everywhere unable to comprehend the larger political significance of the controversy between factions, some definite plan must be adopted and adhered to.

Counter Notice.

For the public good and justice to my client, B. F. Hoover, a persecuted and defrauded, but guileless and most honorable pioneer of the brick industry, at Hoover station, in the vicinity of Gresham, notice is hereby given that a ladies' tailoring expert on the Meier-Frank pay-roll, author of the following notice signed E. Gurney, secretary of the Unique Brick and Tile company, who, for sinister purpose and false pretense, sometimes spells his name backwards and writes letters to himself as such secretary signed "E. Yenrug"; is also, by his Belgium jack-rabbit officiousness, director, treasurer, manager, Sunday worker, law evader, justice court practitioner and corruptor, though he is not a lawyer; and though he owns but one share of stock, while I own ten and Mr. Hoover forty-seven, he is ex-officio president, absolute director and all around boss-flicker of the Unique Brick and Tile company, which like other corporations into which he got his iron claw, he has reduced to the level of the Pulfer Mercantile company, Pacific Coast Packing company and Co-operative Supply House counting their victims about Gresham by the hundreds:

"To Whom It May Concern: You will please take notice that Milo C. King has no authority to represent in any manner or take any contracts for the Unique Brick and Tile company, and that his office as president and director has been declared vacant by the board of directors. By E. Gurney, Secretary. Dated July 29, 1916."

It would seem from the pretense of the above notice that it is not Gurney but King who is assuming authority to buy and sell and violating law and official oath in connection with this corporation; but the fact is to the contrary as may be seen by reading between the lines of the following call for transaction of business by all the directors and officers instead of by the one Gurney: "Gresham, Ore., July 10, 1916. To B. F. Hoover, L. O. Pershin, A. Bingham, Milo C. King and E. Gurney, directors of the Unique Brick and Tile Co., a corporation: You and each of are hereby notified that a special meeting of the directors of the Unique Brick and Tile company, a corporation, is called to be held on Thursday, July 20, 1916, at 7:30 o'clock p. m. of said day, at the office rooms of the undersigned president of the company, at Gresham, Oregon, for legally negotiating a sale of 73,000 brick for which is offered, by Latourell & Son, reliable citizens of Gresham, $438.00, f. o. b., Hoover station; for the purpose of releasing attachment on the same to the amount of $138.00 and $5.00 costs and turning the balance into the treasury of the company, making a public, corporate record of the transaction; and for the further purpose of correcting the minutes of the last regular meeting and expunging therefrom the void action of a majority of the board wherein they attempted to vote the undersigned Milo C. King out of his offices as president and director of the company to serve their private ends and to the prejudice confiscation of the property of the other stockholders and directors.

Any directors who may not be present to object or otherwise vote will be deemed to consent to said sale and said disposition of the proceeds. The secretary will be present with books and files in his possession, and no attorney or other person than those named above will be allowed at the meeting or take part therein. MILO C. KING, President Unique Brick & Tile Co.

Carrying the controlling interest in his wife's name since 1911, on the personal, safety-first theory, the Portland tailor has, in open violation of law, appropriated to his own use everything of value belonging to the corporation and which the original stockholders built up. Mr. Hoover's annual compensation for land clearing and monthly wages for hauling wood has never, with rare exceptions, been paid without litigation, Mr. Gurney charging to the company and taking out of the funds thereof in one instance $140 attorney fees for legal aid in an attempt to bluff Hoover out of a like amount of hard earned wages; and through his mismanagement and arbitrary manipulation of the funds and mortgage on the property, he has practically taken away from Mr. Hoover, the original owner of the land and builder of the brick plant, the earnings of a lifetime, depriving him and his family of house, home and living in his declining years. He undertook to divert my services as attorney for Mr. Hoover by making me president and one of the directors of the corporation; and as soon as he learned to his sorrow that I was not for sale, and would not desert my client, nor be a party to the illegal direction of the corporation, nor lend aid to a road hog in making out of it a conspiracy for taking reward against the innocent, he with two other accommodating directors declared both my office of director and that of president vacant, so they said, without regard to law, order, justice or right in the premises.

Mr. Gurney's notice and publication of this boasted action, to the shame of which and all such he is long dead, is an advertisement for crooks to come to the aid of his notorious handiwork. By suppressing the facts he would let the public believe that his trouble is with the lawyer King and not with the client, Hoover, met by "Yenrug" on the wayside, stripped of his raiment and substance and left wounded and half dead.

But in reckoning with his host he failed to observe that there are not many crooks left in Gresham and vicinity to aid the ladies' tailor with gold brick making propensities. The last heard of C. M. Hall who sued me for $2000.00 for making him pay his fraudulently contracted debts, due mainly to the people of Gresham, and for properly and fearlessly attending to my own business as a lawyer, he was in jail at Vancouver; while H. H. Riddell, attorney and conspirator to relieve my client, John Miller, of Boring, of his $12,000.00 farm on account of alleged slander, was sentenced by the Federal court to three months in jail and to pay a fine of $2500.

This notice is paid for but not out of the funds of the company as in the case of the Gurney notice. The voice of justice, which in so many cases like this is like a voice calling in the wilderness, is never harsh but always pleasing and tickling to the ears of those who have seasonably learned that the way of the transgressor is hard. It is for the sake of justice to all concerned that the lawyer raises a voice in this instance and surrounding wilderness. MILO C. KING.
