FOREST CONSERVATION.

To the people of the northwest the fate of our timber resources has been fruitful of much earnest thought and consideration. In fact, it was only a few years ago that the entire country was agog over the threatened deforestation of the United States. Not only was the annual consumption of lumber and pulpwood far in excess of the yearly growth, as was quite natural, but such vast inroads had been made into the original supply as to make it evident that radical measures of conservation must be applied right soon, or else we should have a country barren of trees and dependent on foreign countries for lumber, paper and all other commodities of which wood forms the basic ingredient.

Today one hears less about deforestation—not because the menace has been eliminated, but partly because it has become an old story, and more especially because individuals, groups of individuals and state and federal governments have put well under way a vigorous campaign for forest conservation.

Hundreds of thousands of acres have been planted with fine seedlings by private enterprise. Individual land owners have entered into the work on a comparatively small scale; associations and corporations have promoted it on a larger scale, and states, as such have pushed it along on a scale still larger.

Meanwhile, the federal government, by virtue of what is known as the Weeks law, has been doing a magnificent work during the last five years by the purchase of great forest areas for national reserves.

There is as much need now as ever there was for private co-operation in the work. A beginning, but only a beginning, has been made. The object of national forest reserves is not to preclude lumbering, but to put lumbering on a strictly intelligent basis. As for the planting of private seedling forests, it will become a wonderfully paying investment, for which a grateful posterity will invoke blessings upon the memory of this generation.

GETTING READY.

The end of the war is coming—some day. The farm loan bank is coming—some day. And settlers are going to pour into Oregon in greater numbers than we have ever known—some day.

And that some day is going to arrive before we are ready for it unless we prepare now. Western Oregon in particular should get ready to help the farmers who will come here from the war-torn lands. They should be made to feel that we want them and that we welcome them.

For we do want them. We need them. Our thousands of acres of idle lands cry aloud for them. Our merchants want to sell them goods. Our produce men want to buy their products. We want them to help build our roads, our waterways and our towns.

And to prove to them that we really want them here there are many things that we can do to make their coming pleasant and their stay more comfortable. Strangers in a strange land cannot adjust themselves to unforeseen and therefore unforfeited conditions without help from those already at home in the new country.

We need in Portland an immigrants' aid association to bring the people here, to settle them on logged-off land at a reasonable price, and to watch over their welfare until they are independent. Social centers should be provided in the communities where they settle with amusements for them of the kind to which they are accustomed. They should,

If from a foreign land, be taught to become American citizens—in everything the expression means. Above all things they should be shown how to be successful farmers—but that, of course, is already cared for by the agencies already at work, the agricultural and mechanical college extension departments, and the state and federal departments of agriculture.

FOR POLITICAL EFFECT.

The recently expired session of congress was notable for the amount of legislation passed for political effect. The most important measure was the trainmen's bill, passed under threat of a strike. Then there were many "pork" measures for local consumption.

The tariff commission and child labor bills, both undemocratic in principle, were passed as a bait to the progressive voters. The farmers' credit act was designed to beguile the farmer, and the employers' compensation act was intended to have a similar effect on the workingman.

The Hay army act is the outcome of the sidetracking of Senator Chamberlain's bill which had the indorsement of all the best army authorities, to please the state militia organizations.

Of course, some of this legislation is meritorious, but it is doubtful if the democratic majority would have violated party principle to such an extent if there had not been an election pending. If the party should now fail of an election, it cannot be charged to failure to make the largest use possible of its control of the government machine.

SCIENCE AND HOPE.

Will the wonders of science ever cease? A California doctor has determined the age of a gypsy girl by an X-ray examination.—Oregonian.

There will now be some hope for the man who is buying a horse.

After two serious accidents at the culvert on the Base Line, near Ruby it would seem that the county should take action looking toward a widening of the distance between the cement guards which is but 22 feet. Forty feet would be none too wide.

What is apparently the relic of some episode of the European war was discovered floating off Old Orchard, Me., in the form of a dory which bore the Italian coat of arms. In it were a number of rubber blankets, coats and some cooking utensils.

Most people prefer magazine fiction to campaign literature; and why not? Magazine fiction doesn't pretend to be anything else, whereas campaign literature foils the unwary and gets 'em het up and boiling over mad.

An eastern writer says there are people who have never seen New York and yet are not unhappy. Most of the unhappiness in this world is experienced by people who have never seen Gresham.

A congressman, just turned loose from Washington, says that President Wilson has changed his mind 52 times. That one-track mind was well equipped with switches, evidently, also turntables.

"Never pick at the enemy who hates you," said a wise man of old. No, indeed; either land on him with a piece of lead pipe or climb on a fence four miles away and think it over.

The scheme of the dancing masters to standardize the popular dances so that they will be the same in every state, sounds a good deal like a serious invasion of state rights.

We do not know what Japan is doing to China, but it is evident enough that China is squalling lustily and there's no traffic cop on the Asiatic highway.

No reason is known why an otherwise normal man should walk backwards from Government Camp to Hood River over the top of Mount Hood.

A Son of Rest informs us that it is a mistake to say the Sons of Rest never strike. They are striking somebody daily for nickles and dimes.

The swimming season is about over and the old Saturday night bathtub is coming into fashion again. It has its charms, nevertheless.

Wood and coal are looking up, and that is a whole lot more reliable prognosticator than the cricket.

Are You Looking Old? Old age comes quick enough without inviting it. Some look old at forty. That is because they neglect the liver and bowels. Keep your bowels regular and your liver healthy and you will not only feel younger but look younger. When troubled with constipation or biliousness take Chamberlain's Tablets. They are intended especially for these ailments and are excellent. Easy to take and most agreeable in effect.—Obtainable everywhere.—Adv.

THE SPICE OF LIFE.

Old Adam, beginnin' with small chance for sinnin', was weedin' an' thinnin' His cabbage and beets. In beautiful Eden, with everything needin' for restin' an' feedin', His joy was complete.

With livin' so aisy; so peaceful an' lazy, the man was sure crazy To want to complain. But just to be civil the poor lonesome devil wished on himself evil And trouble an' pain.

For, first he got lonely, with just himself only, the beasts were so homely. He wished for a wife. So they sent him a Mrs. to add to his blisses. With teasin' an' kisses To sweeten his life.

Instead of caressin', an' provin' a blessin', it's really distressin' The way she turned out. She broke up his quiet an' started the riot by changin' his diet There isn't a doubt.

Contented she found him, but wheeled around him until she had bound him To alter his way. Though knowin' she'd borrow but trouble an' sorrow, no fear of the morrow Would check her, the day.

And since the Creation, through each generation, without alteration, Her nature's the same. She's dartin' an' dashin' for every new fashion. She has even a passion For changin' her name.

But in spite of her millin' an' backin' an' fillin', we are all of us willin' To own that she's nice. The variety in her is spice to life's dinner, an' Man, the ould sinner, Likes plenty of spice. A. S. McGEE.

Prince Gebhardt Bluecher von Wahlstat, grandson of Old Forwards, the Bluecher of Waterloo fame, died recently in Berlin as the result of falling from his horse. He was a lawsuit fiend and spent most of his time bringing actions or being sued by his family, losing most of the cases.
