The list of birds noted in St. Johnsbury, Vt., this season now numbers 122 species, three records having been made in one week. The yellow-billed cuckoo was seen one day, a pair of Connecticut warblers the next day and a pair of water thrushes nesting the third day.

Much legislation will come up before the next session of Congress which will be of vital importance to the Northwest. One of the most important measures having to do with our industries will be the passage of a bill under which water powers may be satisfactorily developed. A prohibitive government tax in addition to the state taxes would discourage investors in these enterprises.

WHEN CATSUP EPIDEMIC IS CONTAGIOUS

It breaks out about this time every year, in every village and country town. One of the strange things about it is that it seldom effects the male population except with the general discomfort felt in any home where there is anything contagious. One of the early symptoms is a continual sneeze, culminating in the question, usually asked over the back fence "What are you cooking, any way? It does smell so good?" And the woman on the other side of the fence answers modestly: "Why, I am trying out a new receipt for catsup. They say it is just lovely, and—wait a minute." Out comes a silver spoon, a dainty china plate with a dip of the delicious stuff—and the epidemic begins to spread!

The next morning, the latest victim of the epidemic calls her next door neighbor on the other side to the back gate and administers a bit of the mixture which she is boiling, and so, on and on down the street it spreads. You could walk along and tack a flag labelled "catsup" on nearly every house on the street, locating the spread of the epidemic by the odors which steal out of the kitchens. Breezes from Araby couldn't be sweeter to the average woman than the combined odors of tomato, spices and vinegar simmering gently on the back of the range, for mingled with this aroma are happy forecasts of winter days when loved ones will sit about the board, sharing chops and roasts and fried oysters, and exclaiming over the catsup.

Of course, the product varies from year to year, or there wouldn't be the joy of passing on the receipts. Maybe one year it was a wonderful concoction of uncooked tomatoes and white mustard seed, which would keep without sealing, and may be the next year it was made from green tomatoes, and the year before that the whole affair had to be mixed up with a yellow gravy made from tumeric and vinegar, but it doesn't make any difference about the ingredients, just so you call it catsup, and give your neighbor a taste of it over the back fence at this season of the year. The epidemic will spread rapidly—that is, as I said before, in villages and country towns. Of course, it wouldn't spread in a city street, any more than any other jolly, friendly thing, for, no matter how delicious the odor from the house next door, you couldn't say anything about it unless you had been properly introduced to the woman who was brewing the mixture. Men laugh about the catsup epidemic. Let them laugh all they please, but for happy, contented living, give me the places where homely, wholesome things break out of bounds and spread.

Lest We Forget.

Every little while, one hears a query as to events which figured in the early part of the present war in Europe. It is not surprising that, in the avalanche of happenings in the two years and more which have elapsed since the outbreak of the war, sight has been lost, in many instances, of events connected with its formal beginning. One of the most confusing phases of the situation seems to be that which has to do with the declarations of war; that is to say, which nation declared war on which others, and so on.

To put it concisely, the facts appear to be about these: The war was formally launched by Austria-Hungary's declaration against Serbia in the closing days of July, 1914. Russia thereupon threatened to make war on Austria, and ordered partial mobilization. Germany, asserting that the mobilization was aimed at herself as well as Austria, demanded that the Czar demobilize his army. This the Czar refused to do unless Austria withdrew her threat against Serbia. Austria refused to yield, Russia refused to demobilize, and the Kaiser declared war on Russia. This at once involved France as the ally of Russia, and the invasion of Belgium brought England in to fulfill her treaty pledge to defend the neutrality of Belgium. There are conflicting claims as to the state of diplomatic negotiations for peace, when Germany declared war on Russia. The allies claim that the Kaiser acted at the very moment when conversations between Petrograd and Vienna had been practically assured by Sir Edward Grey's intercession. The claim for the Kaiser is that all his diplomatic efforts were directed toward confining the war to Austria-Hungary and Serbia.

As to the war declarations of the several nations, which followed fast upon Austria's original notice to Serbia, the following summary is worth remembering:

Great Britain declared war on Germany, Austria, Turkey and Bulgaria.

France declared war on Austria, Turkey and Bulgaria.

Russia declared war on Bulgaria.

Italy declared war on Austria, Turkey, and Bulgaria, and just lately on Germany.

Serbia declared war on Germany and Turkey.

Montenegro declared war on Austria and Germany.

Japan declared war on Germany.

Germany declared war on Russia, France, Belgium and Portugal.

Austria declared war on Serbia, Russia, Belgium and Japan.

Turkey declared war on Russia; and Rumania within the past few days, declared war upon Austria-Hungary.

From the foregoing it will be seen that Great Britain, Germany, Austria and Italy have each made four declarations of war, and that of these Great Britain is the only one of these which has in every case issued a formal declaration of hostilities against each of the nations with which she is at war. Germany, Austria-Hungary, Turkey and Bulgaria—known as the Central Powers—are her declared enemies; and against these all the others, known as the Allied, or Entente, Powers, are at war, either by their own declaration or by that of the enemy. It might be well to paste these facts in one's hat for future reference.

William Heylens, age 104, of Pittsburg, celebrated his birthday by walking from his home to the office of his friend, W. A. Bryan, a distance of a mile and a half, then walked back home. At the time of the civil war Mr. Heylens tried to enlist, but his age was against him, as he was then fifty years old. He cast his first vote in 1832, voting for Andrew Jackson.
