PROHIBITION LAW DISCOURAGES CRIME.

"The present prohibition law makes criminals," say the supporters of the brewers' amendment. In support of their claim they are sending posters throughout the state, on which are reproduced newspaper headlines telling of the arrest of numerous persons, who have violated the law. The poster is a splendid commentary on the faithfulness of the officers of the law, backed up by an enlightened public sentiment. But the poster fails to show the vast decrease in law breaking under the present law. Court records all over the state show that the enforcement of the law is not "making criminals," but helping to prevent crime. In support of this statement, the Evening Telegram of October 5, 1916, prints the following results of its investigations:

Up at Baker, cowboys and men from the mines had a habit of playing a pretty steady game with liquor. During the period from January 1 to July 1, 1915, the number of arrests by the city of Baker for drunkenness and disorderly conduct was 61; during the same six months, 1916, the number had decreased to ten. The total number of arrests in the former period was 139; during the latter period it was 23. For vagrancy arrests, 45 before prohibition, one after the saloons disappeared. And these figures must be considered along with the fact that the logging and lumbering industries have been active in Baker county this year.

At Pendleton, during the period January 1 to June 1, 1915, the total number of arrests was 234; during the same period 1916, the number has decreased to 65. And the latter number included speeders. For vagrancy the number of arrests was 75 and 13 for the two periods respectively. The number of persons in the county jail had decreased from 12 to 5.

In its issue of October 20, the Telegram gives the following comparative figures for Multnomah county:

Six hundred and twenty-three fewer prisoners were held in the county jail in the first nine months of 1916 than in the corresponding period last year, according to figures made public today by George Hurlbert, chief jailer. To October 1 this year there were 1041 prisoners, compared with 1664 in the first nine months of 1915. "Prohibition has done it," Hurlbert said.

Only three prisoners were charged with selling liquor to Indians compared with 34 to October 1, 1915. Nine were in the toils for white slavery in the first three-quarters of 1915; this year there have been four. Non support cases in 1915 numbered 74; in the same period this year 23 men have been arrested on non-support charges.

Of a total of 74 arrests made by county and police officers for violations of the prohibition laws, 32 were made by the sheriff's office. These records include only those police and district court prisoners who were sent to the county jail.

SLANDERING THE PATRIOTS.

Desperation sometimes drives a person to queer extremities. This fact was never more clearly and sadly illustrated than in the case of Secretary of War Baker, whose recent utterance, as outlined in the dispatches, has become one of the disgraceful episodes of the campaign. In the attempt to defend his chief's course in the Mexican matters, and to exalt the Mexican bandits he degraded the American revolutionary soldiers. It was necessary in his argument defending Wilson's policy to show that Villa and his cutthroats are not such bad fellows after all, measured by American standards. Here is what he said:

Washington's soldiers in the march to Valley Forge stole everything they could lay their hands on; took the silver vessels out of the churches and sold them to buy drink. They drove ministers out of the churches. Their money was worthless and they were just as bad characters as the Mexicans.

There is no reason for anybody in this country to make a defense of Mexican bandits unless it be to show that there is nothing of which this country should complain. We must pass over the scores of isolated tragedies in which Americans have lost their lives without sufficient cause; we must forget the raid on Columbus and the massacre at Carrizal; and blot out the memory of Santa Ysabel, where a carload of unarmed Americans were butchered like sheep. These were mere Mexican frolics in which the naughty revolutionists of our sister republic were nearly as bad as the patriots of Valley Forge. The friends and relatives of murdered Americans can never forget either their loss or the authors of it.

Another proof that we overdid things was seen in those 47 days of sunshiney weather. We promised a week for the county fair, but somehow we couldn't stop it, and the weather bureau wouldn't help us.
