COST OF EATING IN GAY NEW YORK

Inspired by hunger, in a rush moment I entered a New York hotel to get a bite to eat, I was accosted by a gentleman who opened the door.

"Ten cents, please," he said.

"What for?"

"I represent the Metropolitan Door Opening Syndicate."

After giving him the money I proceeded in through the corridor. I was detained by another gentleman.

"Excuse me, sir; 10 cents, please."

"What for?"

"For not getting weighed on that weighing machine over there. I represent the Metropolitan Delinquent Weighing Machine company. We have the right to impose a fine on all guests of this hotel who do not get weighed as they pass the machine."

Paying him the money I passed into the restaurant, after giving up my hat and stick to the representative of the Metropolitan Headpiece Hold-up society. I was about to sit down, but another functionary appeared.

"Half a dollar, please."

"What for?"

"In entering the dining room you neglected to walk up to the head-waiter and shake hands with him."

I paid the money and ordered a meal. When I had finished, another gentleman came up, and leaning over in a courteous manner said:

"How much money have you got?"

"Is it necessary for me to tell you?"

"Yes, sir. A new rule just established by the Metropolitan Cash Extracting company requires all guests of this hotel to pay all the cash they have on hand for meals."

"Suppose I object?"

"You will then be boycotted by every restaurant in New York and might have to have your meals at home."

I paid him the money and prepared to depart. I was accosted by another functionary, who was accompanied by officers of the law.

"You are arrested," he said. "It will be necessary for you to appear at the court of general sessions and put up a bond or else spend the night in jail."

"What for?"

He smiled deferentially.

"There is an extra charge here for all people who have no money on their person."

"But," I protested, "how can this be otherwise now?"

Then I said earnestly:

"My dear sir, I can fully understand why you charge people for coming through your doors. I can see why you wish people to weigh themselves. I can appreciate the deference due the head waiter and I can also sympathize with your desire to extract all the money that people have. That is not only business but it breathes the very spirit of the metropolis. But it strikes me as being a little bit unjust to make me pay for not having any money after this other process has been gone through with."

"You do not understand."

Then he placed his hand upon my shoulder.

"My dear sir," he said, "I fear that you are a provincial. Don't you see that it would not do for us to entertain people here even for a few moments unless they had money? They would only take up room without yielding any revenue."—New York Sun.

Wild Game Farms.

The raising of "wild game" is a comparatively new industry in this country, but has been making remarkable strides in the last twelve months, according to the report of the Game Conservation society, which recently held its annual meeting at the Hotel Astor. The society's membership includes many breeders who have established game farms for the purpose of renewing the country's supply of game fowl for table consumption. This supply, according to members of the society, was rapidly diminishing a year or so ago, and many of the most delectable forms of wild food that had formerly been plentiful in this country had become rare dishes even for epicures.

Wild ducks and pheasants are among the varieties of fowl that are being raised by the breeders at the present time, and according to the society's report the former have become so plentiful through this method in some states that they have appeared on the market at prices which place wild duck within the range of the public generally instead of the rich alone. In Minnesota, the report states, wild duck sold at $1 each this year. It is suggested in the report that at the present rate wild duck and other formerly rare fowl may actually tend to lower the cost of the more commonplace meats of daily consumption.

"Thirty-five states now have laws permitting the breeding and sale of all or certain species of game, and many game farms have been started in other states in anticipation of laws encouraging the industry," the annual report says. "Reports coming to the society indicate that all of the states and some of the provinces of Canada soon will permit and encourage game breeding."

"Reports coming to our game census indicate that our members have over 1,999,999 game birds—there were fewer than 100,000 reported last year—and that they have several times as many deer and elk as they had last year. The membership of the society has doubled during the year, and our list shows a very rapid increase.

"The breeding of quail and grouse has been started in the western states, and there is much interest in quail breeding in the southern states, which are well adapted to the production of quail in big numbers."

"Despite the fact that hundreds of thousands of pheasants have been raised by the breeders," the report says, "the prices have continued to rise because importers have been prevented from bringing these birds from foreign countries. The report also states that the breeding of game fish is beginning to attract widespread attention and to prove highly profitable.

"It is evident that comparatively little of our vast territory will be needed to make America the biggest game producing country in the world. Since game overflows from the many breeding grounds and restocks large areas where it has become extinct, the sportsmen in all localities find they are benefited and all prejudice against the industry seems to have disappeared.

"It is highly important that as game becomes plentiful much of it should be eaten, and the sale and eating of game must be relied on to keep up the industry, especially when it is undertaken by popular clubs with small dues, which should sell some of their game and eggs to help pay the cost of production. The Game Conservation society is especially interested in clubs of this character.
