Meat and Milk.

There is more than one reason why the advice to buy more milk and less meat is sound. As the department of public health of the American Museum of Natural History points out, cattle fed for the production of beef return one-sixth of the food value of the grain they eat as meat. Five-sixths of the food value is wasted. But the dairy cow utilizes most of the grain she eats in producing milk so that her milk instead of her meat makes a most valuable contribution to the food supply.

There is another reason why milk is a far more economical food than meat. It furnishes the food elements the body needs at a cheaper cost than meat and in a better balanced condition. It is rich in fat, but not too rich like some meats. It is high in protein but not too high, and heavy meat eaters get more protein than the body needs. It is rich in sugars and meat contains no sugar. Like meat, milk is also rich in mineral salts, especially in lime and the necessary phosphates. We do not use milk as a food in anything like the quantity we should. A quart a day is none too much milk for each member of the family. What can not be drunk can readily be used in the preparation of other dishes. And whether the fat is used in the form of butter or the skim milk as cottage cheese the family is sure of being well fed and cheaply fed when milk is made one of the important foods of the home instead of, as is often the case, used only in coloring the morning cup of coffee or in filling the children's mugs.

Bad roads cost this country $280,000,000 a year, according to J. E. Pennypacker, highway economist in the United States office of public road. According to his figures our annual haulage is 350,000,000 tons, averaging eight miles.

When a diamond is clean and dry the following experiment should be tried. Place on the surface a tiny drop of water and then take a needle or pin and try to move the drop about. If the diamond is genuine, the drop can be rolled about intact. On the other hand, where the gem is an imitation the water spreads directly it is touched with the needle-point.
