OUR COUNTRY TEACHERS.

Gresham is the better for having entertained the county teachers of Multnomah county in a one-day convention, as told in our news columns last Tuesday. This city is in a little closer touch with the progress along educational lines than it was a week ago. Our people have had the privilege of greeting in personal fashion the men and women to whose charge has been committed the instruction of the boys and girls of Portland in this county.

The proceedings of the convention proper were sufficient to occupy the whole day and occupy it profitably; consequently, the time allowed for the high school faculty to demonstrate their own good will toward the visitors was all too short. The impression which the latter left behind them is one of increased confidence in the teaching forces of the country schools, and increased pride in our own educational ideals and progress toward the attainment of those ideals, as was evidenced by the program.

This was Gresham's first opportunity as a school convention city, and the teachers here have benefited by it. This is inevitable. The individual teacher who has had the advantage of comparing notes with other individual teachers, who has exchanged suggestions with his or her fellow-workers in the important field of education, and who has jotted down, mentally or literally, the views of speakers who are leading exponents of their respective educational branches, counts for vastly more, as he or she discovers in the course of the ensuing year's work.

This rule applies quite as forcefully to any other sphere of endeavor or as to educational work. Just as no man lives unto himself alone, so no man or woman can establish a maximum of real accomplishment altogether independently of the accomplishments of others. Such a convention as that of last Saturday makes for more general development, as well as for more rapid development of the individual. Its tendency is to improve the professional equipment of every teacher.

And the state benefits most of all. Anything which is a factor in increased efficiency of its teachers is by so much a gain for the boys and girls who are to be its men and women; and on those boys and girls, those future men and women, must the state depend for its progress in years to come. Gresham and its teachers know this; know, too, that teachers' conventions do promote efficiency in the teaching force.

CONSERVE THE SUGAR.

For weeks the food administration has been calling upon the American people to cut down the consumption of candy and sweet drinks. Outside a comparatively few earnestly patriotic households, scant heed has been paid to the request. Waste, a notorious characteristic of us as a nation, has proceeded right along. The nonsensical habit of putting three or four spoonfuls of sugar in a cup of tea or coffee—when one or two at the most, would have made it just as sweet—has continued; and with it the throwing away of a sixteenth to an eighth of an inch of partially dissolved sugar in the bottom of the cup after the beverage has been consumed.

This and other habits of a truly mischievous extravagance have been largely instrumental in creating a sugar shortage throughout many parts of the country where supplies were already at low ebb. This shortage has been mostly felt in the New England states and as far south as Georgia, and even as far west as Pennsylvania. There can be no relief until the last of this month when the new crop is due for distribution. We, on this coast, have been more fortunate but our time may come too soon for us to enjoy it.

So far as prices are concerned, retailers are receiving their stocks at the rates agreed upon, and assurance is given from Washington that there is no valid reason for charging the consumer more for sugar than he has been paying during the past month. The retail price, according to the food administration, should be from 8 1/2 cents per pound for beet and Hawaiian sugar to 9 cents for the cane product; but the shortage of supply is real, and the refusal of retailers to sell more than a limited quantity to a purchaser is in compliance with an urgent request from the food administration at Washington. This fact, in itself, is significant of the seriousness of the situation.

If any be so selfish as to ask why we should deny ourselves in any measure in order that our allies in France may have sugar, let them reflect a little. Once upon a time a generous-hearted Frenchman came to the aid of the American colonies. At Yorktown, French soldiers outnumbered Americans. It is the land of Lafayette which, today, is asking us for 100,000 tons of sugar to relieve her actual distress. Can we refuse to share our abundance with our allies of 1781, who are still our allies? We Americans consume sugar at the rate of 7 1/2 pounds a month per capita. The French have been on an allowance of less than two pounds a month per capita. And unless we come to their rescue they must soon be deprived of sugar altogether. We have enough to supply us at our present rate of consumption until the first of the year, when the first new crop comes from Cuba. The extreme shortage in France will be in the next two months.

Why should we not cut our customary allowance—in most cases excessive, anyway—one-third, in order that we may share with those of our allies who, otherwise, will have none of this necessary article of diet? Every one of us remembers that General Pershing, soon after his arrival in France, had to choose between sugar on his strawberries and sugar in his tea. He could have either but he could not have both. That's the way they are getting along in France—except that conditions have been growing worse ever since that time.

Less candy, less sweet drinks, less sugar on cereals, less sugar in coffee—we can reduce our allowance very materially and be quite as well for it. At the same time we shall be helping our allies in France, the land which sent us Lafayette. We shall do it anyway; the important thing is that we should do it without grumbling.

If anybody comes to your house and makes inquiries about your stock of canned goods, tell him that it is none of his business, and if you have sufficient force or wit detain him until you can get an officer.

With fifteen postmasters in various parts of the country dismissed for kissing girls in their offices, perhaps it will occur to some that even a democrat cannot hold his job if he doesn't behave himself.

The kaiser predicts that after the war the Turks will join the Germans in kultur. After those Armenian massacres it looks like it would be easy, as the trocites of both are on the same level.

Washington says that the price of canned goods is going to drop; but who cares? Didn't every housewife put up enough this year to put the canned goods business out of business?

The man in the trenches works overtime and Sundays. And that's a good thing for every man to remember when he gets the notion that he is overworked and underpaid.

It only costs two cents to mail a drop letter, or one on your rural route. That explains why your monthly statements were no fewer than formerly.

Remember, too, that you'll not be very well thought of by your patriotic neighbors unless you have one of those food pledge cards in your window.

A French port is not something to drink, as has been suspected, but instead is a place where some of the soldier boy letters come from.

Have you noticed the little peculiarity in some of those handshakes lately? The primaries will be due in a few months.

The colonels who are objecting to serving in the national guard may be glad they got such an assignment later on.

A great many wives, who used to be viewed as liabilities, in these military days have become valuable assets.

Oregon is again at the top, in the food pledge business, and will probably be in the lead in keeping them.

It seems too bad that no scheme can be devised to have the weather bureau co-operate with the wood pile.

It seems to be pretty hard to get a German chancellor, but then just think what a rotten job it is.

Don't forget to pay that second half of your taxes. The penalty is going up every day.

Roosevelt has lost the use of one eye, but his other I is working just as well as ever.

OTHER WAYS TO SAVE.

So much has been said about meddling with peoples' stomachs, in which we are jumping from sirlolin steaks to Johnny cake and carp, that some are going to resent it and break over the traces. Time and patience, linked with kindness will eventually win us away from our idols and we are some day going to adjust our appetites to the needs of the occasion.

We who have to forego the pleasure of spending a vacation somewhere in the old countries across the Atlantic must cut down on our bills of fare and cultivate a liking for things we are not used to. Here are a few suggestions:

Hash is a wonderful institution embodying potatoes, meat, onions and other mysteries, all highly desirable singly or en masse. Its use will not seriously hinder us from beating the kaiser.

Fish with dumplings are cheaper than meat and are readily eaten when served to relatives or visiting friends.

Rutabaga and cabbage might be cooked in glue in emergencies.

Don't leave a cigar butt out on the gate post over night.

Spaghetti is always welcome and there's no limit to the other things that can be mixed with it.

Horse-tooth corn parched and run through a coffee mill is mighty fine eating. Buy corn now before this year's crop is exhausted.

Have your wife launder your collars and sew the buttons on yourself.

Too many housewives have failed to understand carrots. Try, try again.

Dropping in on a friend often saves a meal.

Sleeping till noon will conserve the eggs and pancakes.

Cook turnips when you are using the stove for other cooking.

Don't pace the floor while waiting for a long distance call. It's wearing on the shoes. Pawing the ground while talking to a young lady wears them out in the same way.

Beware of recipes calling for more than one egg.

Turn back your cuffs during working hours. You can wear them two weeks that way.

A visit to the movie saves light, fuel and rugs.

An all-day sucker will destroy your appetite for dinner.

Chipped beef is thinner than sliced ham.

There are several other ways to save which we can't think of.

Hereafter, while preparing your menus, don't forget that you signed a food pledge.

For a Weak Stomach.

As a general rule all you need to do is to adopt a diet suited to your age and occupation and to keep your bowels regular. When you feel that you have eaten too much and when constipated, take one of Chamberlain's Tablets.—Adv.
