ABRAHAM LINCOLN

Today is the anniversary of America's great martyred president, the one, who, second only in some respects to Washington, will be honored as long as the nation exists. It is a tribute to him that today is a national holiday and that no American is to be found who will fail to do honor and reverence to his memory.

Lincoln, his life, his greatness, will be eulogized today wherever his name is known. And if the destiny that controlled his advent upon earth could have revealed his lowly origin before that event it could also have revealed the shadow of the bar sinister that hung over his mother, and the trials and privations that were his lot. That same destiny would have started the whole world had his horoscope been read aright, and would have acclaimed the dense ignorance of the people among whom he was raised—even his own father.

His birth was unheralded to the world and his days of boyhood and young manhood were obscure. His attainments were all his own and his success was due almost wholly to himself. Looking back upon his infancy and its surroundings one can but wonder how it should have happened that such a great man could come into the world with its stigma upon the name of his mother.

If she, in her humble surroundings, was pointed at as one without a parent, he was to redeem her with a name so great and glorious that the whole world might hail her as the mother of a regenerated race which had suffered the wrongs of servitude until he spoke the word that made it free.

In the old world the flower of knighthood reveled in the licentiousness and debauchery that brought forth numerous progeny without a legitimate title to anything but their existence. There is no record that any of them ever felt the reprobation or censure of their fellows for the profligacy which marked the careers of kings and courtiers alike; of the effrontery and shame which is history's tale of such women as Nell Gwynne, Madame deStael and many others; and it is equally true that in the new world such men and women were the objects of the scorn of everyone. It was in the creed of the Puritans, and the religion of the pilgrim fathers to brand such women with the scarlet letter—and Lincoln's grandmother wore it while nourishing the mother of the nation's greatest martyr.

In no other land and in no other era of this world's existence could a man with the antecedents of Lincoln ever have become what he became. In no other age could he have risen above his early surroundings, and in no other man was there ever the spark of such great intelligence as his in the same direction. He retrieved the shame of Lucy Hanks and the besotted ignorance of his own father, who could neither read or write, and on his own escutcheon he carved a name that will last forever.

NEW WAR SPIRIT.

The war spirit in this country has been stirred by the sinking of the Tuscania and the loss of more than one hundred lives of Americans by a German submarine. We have suddenly begun to realize as never before that the job is our job, and that it will become increasingly ours from now on. Even the Germans will sooner or later have to face the fact that the American army is going to play an important part in the war.

American troops are now in the trenches, not for educational purposes but for business. They have been on the Lorraine front for two weeks—a sector that has been quiet for many months. The heavy fighting has been further north and west. Our army is now receiving marked attention from the Germans which the Americans are returning. There has been heavy artillery fire on both sides, and the airmen are becoming active. Probably in a short time we will be receiving a casualty list by the side of which the Tuscania list will pale into insignificance.

American people will be glad to know, on the authority of a French expert, that the work of certain American batteries was "well-nigh perfect". There will from now on be a rapid extension of the line held by our troops, and we will read tales of valor along with the death lists that will still more firmly set our determinations to further point of endurance.

The news of the Tuscania disaster will reinforce the decision of the inter-allied council, which was that there must be a vigorous and effective prosecution of the war until the pressure of that effort produced a change of temper in the enemy governments, justifying the hope of a conclusion of a peace based on the principles of freedom, justice and respect for international law. That is now the feeling of the American people.

Very likely some of the labor agitators would be better pleased if the working time were reduced to not more than three hours a day, the work to be performed for nothing and the laborers to be paid the twenty-one hours they didn't work.

Now that Representative Glass of Virginia has started the fireworks against Senator Chamberlain, we suppose the senatorial Adam's apples will bob up and down until one of them gets brave enough to set off another fizz splutter.

We all know that Gresham is patriotic but we hardly expected to see its patriotism reflected in the delinquent tax list. Inside the city limits it is 100 per cent. There are a few tax slackers in Troutdale and Fairview.

In the real world war game that is going to the 'steenth inning, the United States will have to get out of the bush league and sign up some of the champion players if it intends to play the series out to a finish.

For the shortest month in the year February has a big job on hand. Four meatless, four wheatless, four porkless days, with two holidays and St. Valentine's Day will keep us guessing.

There are four congressional vacancies in New York, but the country can get along until they are filled. It might be a good idea to leave them vacant and save the salaries for war purposes.

Those enemy aliens who hastened to register at the last minute reminded one of the story of the boy who was in a hurry to eat his pie before it was all gone.

It looks as if about half the economic theories prevalent in this country came out of some poorly organized insane asylum.

Perhaps the meat packers didn't want to be investigated for fear the people would find out things which would shock them.

The German crown prince wants to visit these shores after the war. Wouldn't you like to serve on the reception committee?

The sugar shortage may yet be responsible for the calling off of the rhubarb spring drive.

It is getting pretty close to that time of the year when the garden spade needs to be tuned up.

You can take a keener interest in your war garden if you own your own home.

Will those new war garden valentines be rated as merchandise at the postoffice?

There should be a hoppen for every parlor in Oregon.

ORIENT SCHOOL BOYS ARE SELLING THRIFT STAMPS

The boys in the Orient school, under the leadership of their principal, C. M. Quicksall, are imbued with patriotism and are working in harmony in the sale of U. S. Thrift stamps. Their method of working is to select a captain and all students in the school assist the captain. The student furnishing the captain the most assistance in value of stamps sold takes the captain's office as soon as he has sold $50 worth of stamps. The thrift and zeal which they are throwing into the work resulted in the sale of $102 worth of stamps last week. This week they expect to double the amount. They are using the receipt book furnished by the First State Bank free to all of the schools that request them. Each receipt asks the purchaser of the stamps to secure for the student solicitor another purchaser from some friend or neighbor and thus an endless chain is formed, and in time the whole community is working for one cause, that of furnishing money to Uncle Sam.

JURY OBSERVATIONS.

Jury duty is not only a good experience for a person, but it is illuminating and offers up an unlimited supply of ideas. One such idea is that the jurors shall have permission to knit—at least during the period of the war while knitting is necessary.

It is understood in advance that the average juror may not know how to knit, especially in Oregon where women are not called on to do jury duty; but in these modern times many men have taken to knitting as an outward expression of patriotism.

Nothing is much more tiresome than sitting on a bench while the jury is being selected to try a case. Even those who are selected rarely get much to keep them awake except some racy testimony or a verbal fight between opposing lawyers. Sometimes the drawing of a jury is quite expensive and the jurors might be persuaded to knit socks as a partial return for their wages.

The juror has to pay attention to the evidence, the arguments and the instructions, naturally. But at the same time his hands are idle and he paws around aimlessly, wishing there was something he could do. One juror will open his knife and shut it again, repeating the movement time after time. Another will drum on the chair with his fingers. A third will ruffle up his hair for want of better exercise.

During long trials the members of juries are forced to sit, day after day, doing nothing except trying to keep awake and listening to what the various witnesses have to say. If these men were provided with plenty of yarn and some knitting needles they could improve their enforced idleness to a great extent.

There are no statistics available from which to make comparisons and an estimate would be hard to make, but it is safe to assume that twelve knitters in the jury box and probably as many more who are waiting to be called, all good and true, could turn out a great many pairs of socks, especially if the proceedings were long drawn out, as they sometimes are.

Another phase of the question which just naturally outrides itself at this point is that women jurors would do admirably if knitting should be introduced into the courtrooms. Of course, some would have to be made jurors, also. Women have been used as jurors in some states and the results have been as satisfactory as where men sat in the box. The women nearly all know how to knit, and that is where they have the lead on the men, and there would be something inspiring in seeing a jury box filled with women whose fingers were flying and who would knit two and purr two while the learned counsel for the plaintiff objected to the equally learned counsel for the defendant leading the witness. Perhaps the knitters would drop a stitch now and then, but what of it.

It would be easy enough to stop for a moment and regard opposing counsel while the fight was hot and interesting. But when the court had ruled on the point at issue and the witness had resumed his work of telling the story at hand, the business of knitting and purring could be resumed. And from a woman jury there is no question about the amount of work that could be done with needles and yarn.

Don't forget to do your valentining early.
