CHAMBERLAIN'S VICTORY.

Americanism has won the victory over partisanship. The movement looking to the creation of a war cabinet led by Senator Chamberlain of Oregon, has come to a full stop, as every republican and many democrats expected it would, because it could proceed farther only as a partisan measure.

But there is to be no partisan warfare and we can go about the task of whipping Germany as the president wills it shall be done. The melting away of a purpose to fight for a war cabinet does not represent the breakdown of criticism of the administration nor of Secretary Baker. It does not represent change of opinion as to the desirability of a war-planning cabinet. It means that we do not purpose to waste our energies in fighting the president, but to put them into the business of fighting the Germans.

The president, of course, has won the victory. It is not a new experience for him since the war began, but it will have its later effects when the people are less busily engaged. Later he will find that some of his victories are going to be bare of future results. History will tell the story as it should be told of how he has coerced the leaders into yielding to his desires.

Nobody who has followed the president's career doubts his political adroitness. As an opportunist capable of achieving immediate personal and party ends he has few peers. This time his task was easy. All he had to do was to call Senator Chamberlain a liar and accept the benefits of flourishing the party whip. Once the attack was made, the war cabinet issue became a partisan issue, and therefore, and henceforth, impossible to right-minded, patriotic men!

So the president won again. But the greater victory will fall to Senator Chamberlain and the others whose splendid devotion to country enables them to rise superior to the party lash—to waspish scurrility, and to the president's harsh attack upon their veracity and integrity.

The president, in Senator Chamberlain's words, is "a very distinguished gentleman who has the love and the admiration of the people, and who, by their suffrage occupies the highest place in the gift of the people." Being much less important than the United States, it is less important that he should lose or win a personal fight than that the United States should maintain or lose its national existence, and so there are strong men of vision and consecration who avoid the entanglements of what the president would consider as a fight with him and rise to the larger duties of the war.

Senator Chamberlain has shown the spirit in which to take the rebuff of a proposal intended for the strengthening of the president's hands. He who today can overcome the feeling of resentment and keep right on doing his utmost for the winning of the war will be a sharer in the greater victory of Americanism over partisanship.

Recently the presidents have been smoothly shaved or else compromised on mustaches. Cleveland and Roosevelt set the pace in that respect. Even many governors and senators have revealed in chin brushes and tea strainers. Other great men have felt the need or desire for hair on their faces.

After all, there is as much excuse for whiskers as there is for mustaches. These decorations have been called misplaced eyebrows and compared to young caterpillars just learning to crawl. The young men wearing these faint disturbances, just under the nose, give restless fingers something to do. Full many a young man, with nervous fingers, now keeps them away from his pockets and spends his time putting loving pats on his—almost—mustache.

Whiskers, many eminent doctors have declared, are far from sanitary and they may carry a multitude of germs as well as cover a multitude of dirty collars and shirt fronts. But

BELTS AND APPENDICITIS

This war is bringing lots of new things to our attention. We are going down the list picking out the toggery Huns and are just now engaged in looking over the waist belt department. It is a Hun headquarters all right, for it contains just the right kind of ammunition which pleases the kaiser. It is doing more in the assassination line than a submarine.

Of late years it has come to the point where the young man who resorted to suspenders to keep up his trousers was looked upon as old-foggy and hopelessly behind the times. The up-to-date male wears a belt and rather prides himself on it. Some compromised, reverting to the belt in hot weather when vests are uncomfortable and returning to the more familiar and trustworthy suspenders with cool weather.

Now the wearer of "galluses" is vindicated by the military record. The world war has caused a reversion to the primitive in more ways than one, but perhaps in no way more favorable to man's health. The belt for man is what tight lacing spells for women. They are twin evils, but man is going to see the waist belt evil before the woman sees the serpent in the tight-laced corset.

After examining more than 100,000 draft men New York physicians have placed the stamp of science on a theory advanced by an American surgeon that the practice of wearing belts is injurious to the health, and they recommend a return to the habit of wearing suspenders. One authority says, "Start at the beginning." Fifteen or twenty years ago you hardly ever heard of appendicitis. Twenty years ago nearly 90 per cent of American men wore suspenders. Then came the fad of wearing belts, and appendicitis operations became more common.

Before the advent of the belt you seldom heard of stomach troubles, and when they did happen they were usually the result of over-indulgence. Nowadays more men are wearing belts than suspenders, and it is almost the exception to find one of the former who has no trouble in the regions of his bread basket.

With human efficiency necessary to the winning of the war it is up to patriotic Americans to discard the deadly belt, abandon a worse than faddish fashion and go back to common sense and suspenders.

ABOUT WHISKERS

Whether it is the spirit of economy or of fashion that is cropping out among men, or whether it is not, there are intimations that whiskers are to be much worn during the spring and coming summer. Likewise the indication is that if whiskers obtain a firm hold during the growing season they will be retained as a fall and winter crop. The reason, it is said, is because so many soldiers find it impossible to shave while at the front, and are permitting their beards to grow.

Those of us who can remember will recall that beards were common and likewise popular following the close of the Civil war.

Whiskers were used as camouflage long before there was any such word. Perhaps the last and most popular use to which whiskers may be put is camouflage. Many a man has grown a Vanduyke and thereby provided himself with the commanding appearance of a lieutenant-general. Whiskers provide an excellent screen for a restless Adam's apple. Also they are great as necktie savers, and savers of barber's fees, if worn sufficiently long and burly. They have been known to protect a soiled shirt front, but those of this class are first cousins to the jungle.

Commencing with Lincoln, whiskers have been worn in the White House by six presidents, the others being Grant, Hayes, Garfield, Arthur, and Harrison. So the bewhiskered plain citizen is in good company. Arthur affected the flowing side whiskers, but the other presidents ran mostly to the common variety.

Recently the presidents have been smoothly shaved or else compromised on mustaches. Cleveland and Roosevelt set the pace in that respect. Even many governors and senators have revealed in chin brushes and tea strainers. Other great men have felt the need or desire for hair on their faces.

After all, there is as much excuse for whiskers as there is for mustaches. These decorations have been called misplaced eyebrows and compared to young caterpillars just learning to crawl. The young men wearing these faint disturbances, just under the nose, give restless fingers something to do. Full many a young man, with nervous fingers, now keeps them away from his pockets and spends his time putting loving pats on his—almost—mustache.

Whiskers, many eminent doctors have declared, are far from sanitary and they may carry a multitude of germs as well as cover a multitude of dirty collars and shirt fronts. But

ARE YOU GUILTY?

That person who willfully hoards any necessities shall, upon conviction thereof be fined not exceeding $5,000 or be imprisoned for not more than two years, or both. Necessities shall be deemed hoarded when either held contracted for, or arranged for by any person in a quantity in excess of his reasonable requirements for use and consumption for himself and dependents for a reasonable time.—U. S. Food Administration Act, passed Aug. 10, 1917.

When the call is for economy and the price of soap is going up as well as the barber's prices, there are arguments in their favor. And the old men are not going to allow their boys who come home from the war all bewhiskered to have a full monopoly of such hirsute appendages.

The inquisitive subscriber wants to know if the scarcity of red dye is being caused by the use of so much of it in making government red tape. We are not posted as to the dye industry, but we feel that the political cowards and manipulators on one side and the contemptible profiteers on the other manage to keep the red tape spools unwinding, and the supply seems to be endless.

For the benefit of the baby class in political economy we would impress upon them that money is essential in most affairs. But the winning of the war in the last analysis depends upon labor and production. Money will be of little use if the other requisites, such as food, raiment, munitions and ships, are not forthcoming.

"Wives in all walks of life are prone to hug delusions," says a woman writer. Well, when a woman marries she is expected to hug something, and we suppose that is about all a great many of them can ever get to stay around the house.

An Indiana young miss of ten years started to France to be a nurse. We don't wish her any bad luck, but, of course, we have a sneaking hope that she will not marry anybody but an American soldier if it be her fate to find a soulmate "over there."

A newspaper paragrapher says that Uncle Sam is the largest employer in the world. Guess it's true, but we believe you will admit that the kaiser is keeping more persons busy than any man who has ever lived.

A speaker down in Portland says that paying one's income tax is considered patriotic. Here in Gresham it is considered exceedingly prudent. Only idiots will attempt to beat the government by lying out of it.

Senator Chamberlain will be as good-a-republican as any of us after awhile. Perhaps the republicans of Oregon who have elected him so many times have been right all the time.

Four southern states have ratified the national prohibition amendment. It will give California great pleasure to ratify the national suffrage amendment.

The local picture show theater is probably the only one in existence which has a William S. Hartless Day. It seems heartless, but Hoover didn't do it.

Have you noticed that hens are no longer quoted in the market reports? We can all live on turkeys now unless we are obliged to get down to jack rabbits.

The impression grows that when Germany gets ready to withdraw from Belgium she will try to take the most of Belgium with her.

"Absence makes the heart grow fonder" of Old Glory, when it is absence of tenderloins and pork chops.

Save the Sugar.

Save the sugar and the wheat that would go into your dessert by finishing your meal with a rosy-cheeked Oregon apple. This is the suggestion of Federal Food Administrator W. B. Ayer, who calls attention to the fact that by so doing you will not only be aiding Mr. Hoover in his conservation work, but you will be benefitting your health and at the same time giving your support to an important Oregon industry.

In the high class Eastern hotels and restaurants the Oregon apple is regarded as a great luxury, and is listed on the menus at figures proportionately high.

"A prophet in his own country is without honor." Is this also true of the Oregon apple?
