HOW GERMANS PLAY THE KAMERAD GAME

An article written for the official publication of the United States marines, now winning glory in France, says:

"There are some things about the boche mode of warfare which the marines haven't as yet learned and probably never will. On more than one occasion the 'squareheads,' as the Germans are affectionately called, have attempted to teach and to play what is popularly known as the game of 'Kamerad,' but with poor success. Somehow the marines don't take to it as they should. For the benefit of the uninitiated it might be explained that the game originated with the boche. It has the made in Germany mark stamped all over it. It can be played by any number of persons and consists in say eight or ten boche coming across no man's land on a run, with hands upraised and shouting 'Kamerad.' (That's where this form of amusement derives its name.

"When they shout 'Kamerad' it means that they're playing the game and you mustn't shoot at them, but allow them to come quite close. If you shoot at them it spoils the whole game, and besides it's strictly against the rules. Boche rules of course. Any way, you're not to do any shooting. They will then come up and each boche picks out the marine that he likes the best. To show that you're his kamerad and that he means it, he places his arms about your neck, almost as if he were going to kiss you. At the same time he draws a knife, of the long trench variety, and stabs you in the back. Then the first part of the game is over. Sometimes they don't come so close, and instead of using the knife they use a grenade, with practically the same results. This process can be repeated until either one side or the other tires of playing. It's a game of black treachery which betrays the Germans' evil ingenuity.

"The boche picked out a particularly dark night to play this game with some marines who were doing patrol duty, but for some reason or other the latter didn't feel like playing, hadn't thoroughly learned the rules of the game, or else from what they had heard just simply didn't like the game or the way it was being played. Any way, when four boche came running across no man's land the other night and shouted 'Kamerad,' one of the marines yelled 'Sure, I'm the guy,' and let go. It was dark, and he couldn't quite see whether he'd made a good hit. There were a few other shouts of 'Kamerad,' but he fired some more. Next morning they found two boche just beyond the wire and also some equipment evidently belonging to the ones that had managed to get back to their lines and had discarded haversacks, gas masks, and belts, and lost their caps in their hurry. The blood-stained belt and a gas mask with a hole shot in it testified that the marine had made a hit."

Spruce production for airplanes in the northwest reached a new high mark when forty-one carloads of dressed and kilndried spruce were shipped from Vancouver, Washington. The shipments totalled approximately 900,000 feet, sufficient for 900 ordinary airplanes.

It Beats the Dutch

Supplementary to the newly-planned trade relations between Holland and Germany, is information contained in the report of United States Consul Mahin, at Amsterdam, concerning the fallen fortunes of the Dutch fisheries. The report shows, as plainly as anything can show, how the German policy of brutal intimidation has affected at least one friendly neighbor; and it may account in very large measure for the apparent disposition of the Netherlands government to yield unduly to German demands. The report shows that the total catch of all fish by the Dutch in 1916 was 165,513; in a single year, 1917, this total shrank to 33,759 tons. Herring, the chief item on the list, dropped from 95,000 tons in 1916 to 300 tons in 1917. In other words, the industry was ruined—wiped out, in fact—and Consul Mahin's report attributes the decline to the activities of the German U-boat and destroyer fleet; which, instead of directing its efforts exclusively against enemy vessels, has sunk Dutch fishing boats, torn up their nets, and played sad havoc in general with the Dutch fishing industry.

It is no news to Americans that the German U-boats have interfered seriously with neutral fisheries. Scandinavian fishermen have by no means escaped the depredations of these pirates and it would surprise no one in this country to learn that Norwegian fishing, especially, has suffered in proportion to the figures shown in this official report from Amsterdam. In thus stopping the work of gathering food from the sea, Germany is pursuing a course of arrant stupidity, of course; for most of Holland's export trade in food has been with Germany, and even doubts that the reported purpose of the Netherlands government to supply Germany with 50,000 tons of potatoes means that the German demand for other Dutch foods and commodities is destined to meet with compliance, if the proposed Dutch-German trade plan goes into effect. To be sure, Holland, along with other European neutral nations, has been reduced to hunger, and Germany may find her the more tractable—the more susceptible to intimidation—on that account; but she cannot supply Germany with fish which she has not been permitted to catch, and only in the deepest recesses of Potsdam psychology, if anywhere, can be found the secret of what Germany hopes to gain by cutting off a portion of her own food supply, as well as of Holland's.

Astoria will open new elevators to the public on August 17. Magnificent modern grain elevators, built at a cost of $393,900, are the largest on the coast. Holds 1,200,000 bushels. With one of best fresh water ports in the world, Astoria is reaching for her share of the trade.
