WORKING FROM WITHIN.

It will be just as necessary to control the German mind factories of the United States as it is to control the German munition factories of Germany. Most Americans of this country are of the opinion that the mind factories are powerful as an influence and that if the German people of America are ever to become wholly in sympathy with American institutions they must use the English language—especially in their public gatherings. The main work to this end will be done in the American schools hereafter, but the patriotic assistance of the Germans is needed in their churches.

The work that will be done here, whether agreeable to the Germans or not, will be supplemented to some extent in Germany by the same force—not of arms, but of moral suasion and a teaching that no longer can Germany ever become a menace to any other nation. To do this the English language will be largely taught there, but not to the exclusion of German. One will not supersede the other, but both will join together in the formation of a new literature and a better understanding.

We can and will take possession of Germany's strategic centers, we can and will take over certain German territories, probably as pledges of the payment of the war indemnities, we can and will make sure that there shall be no return of German militarism. All these and many other things come within our power and right. And yet, having humbled Germany, and made her pay for her criminality, Germany would be the old Germany still, in thought, unless her children learn the truth about the world and Germany's place in it.

All we can do by control of martial Germany will be working from outside inward. It may "get there" in time, but the process will be painfully slow. Admittedly it will be slow business changing over a national consciousness by process of education, but this process will lead to lasting results, and it can only be hoped that the sensible men of Germany will themselves see that the future prosperity and greatness of their country depend upon the creation of a sane standard mind by some assimilation of the English language, and proceed to create it, by working from within outward.

And the same is more applicable to every German in the United States. A quiet acquiescence to public opinion and an effort to become wholly American is needed, not only in the schools but in the churches. To discontinue the use of German would help to allay all feeling and put a stop to antagonisms that can bring nothing but censure and a long train of evils to the Germans themselves. The purely American mind of judicial poise can see trouble from a continuance of something that so many oppose, whether it be sane or unreasonable. On that point we express no opinion.

There are several families in Gresham who would show a great deal more sense this year than they did last if they were to determine to raise at least fifty chickens this year and then do it.

The former soldier will miss being started at when he gets back into civilian clothes.

DRYING FOODSTUFFS.

It is predicted by some experts in handling large quantities of canned goods and fruits and vegetables that the future of canning is to be short-lived on any extensive scale. It is claimed that the preservation of perishable foodstuffs will largely supplant canning factories. Rapid progress has been made in the development of the dehydrating process by the government since the beginning of the war. Plans are under way now to utilize a number of large breweries as dehydrating plants. Just as the civil war gave to this country its canning industry, the experts say, so will the great war mark the beginning of the dehydrating of perishable foods as a large-scale business.

Prophecy on the basis of the meager start now made is dangerous, yet it would be surprising if the near future did not bring a great extension of the dried food industry and elevate it to a level with the nation's most important business. The war has shown the usefulness of dehydrated food in the army. Government tests have indicated that many more foods could be subjected to the process profitably. Food with the water removed is highly concentrated and not bulky. It would cost less to pack, less to transport and less to handle all the way along the line because of its decrease in size and weight. Dealers would take no risk of its spoiling as they do with underhydrated perishables. All these factors ought to make for lower prices, and lower prices ought to make for the popularity of any kind of process.

Perhaps eventually the dream of the scientist of fiction picturing man obtaining his sustenance from one or two minute tablets will be realized. Food without water will not make an imposing appearance, but it will satisfy bodily needs as well as bulkier food consisting of three-fourths water at food prices. It will not do, however, for the men who are planning the hydration of foodstuffs hitherto sold with water to overlook the aesthetic and gustatory aspects of their problem. If the hydrated spud does not taste right, it will not be eaten, no matter what its food value may be.

Dehydration is an Oregon invention. Several small plants have been built in this state and the drying of fruits and vegetables has been done successfully. The inventor is H. M. Lambert of Portland, who proved that he could outdo Heinz with his 57 varieties. Many Gresham people will remember a lecture and display of dried products by George K. Rogers in Metzger's hall a dozen or more years ago. Mr. Lambert proved that his invention was a success and his range of dried products included nearly every variety of fruit and vegetable grown here as well as fish and meats. Mr. Lambert afterward sold his patent rights and is now engaged in the manufacture of the Multiplex automobile tires, another of his successful inventions.

One can readily see that there is going to be great opposition to the dehydrating process by certain big interests. These will include all canner owners and manufacturers of cans and canning machinery. It will need the national government to give it a start, but if the experiments are a success,—and of this there seem to be no doubts, the paid lobbyists will postpone the inevitable as long as possible.

Doesn't it seem funny that next year we, the people, will elect another president? It don't seem that more than two years have passed since the democrats were worrying over Oregon, because this was the only state west of the Mississippi to go republican.

In some places within the borders of the United States thousands of children are starving for want of milk. What a shame the condition did not exist about the time some of the milk profiteers there were born.

It is said that rabbits have influenza. Now, wouldn't it be just like the poultry dealers to spread such a report, only for the fact that not much poultry is for sale just now, with eggs at six-bits a dozen.

This is the month when the fuel saved during the warm days is going to come in mighty handy.

GRANGERISM.

In a discussion of the railroad situation, the New York World says that "the plan of dual federal and state regulation grew out of Grangerism, and Grangerism was obstructive of railroad development when the courts prevented it from being wholly obstructive. Grangerism disappeared nearly thirty years ago, but its obstructive spirit took on the forms and force of law and learned nothing, and grew until it had never before been so full-blown in practice as when, in the midst of a great war, the country was compelled to notice that its all-impotent transportation arm was crippled."

The World may have drawn a correct picture of the grange policy of thirty or forty years ago, but such a policy does not exist today. It might have drawn a distinction between then and now, for Grangerism has not disappeared. The grange is stronger today than it was then and is a growing organization. It is not now controlled by radicals, although it may once have been, and it does not now advocate a program that includes anything illogical or sensational, excepting now and then in some state granges that are being led by such chimerical illusions as the non-partisan league. There is hope that such illusions are being dispelled, not only in Oregon, but elsewhere, more especially in the west.

However, it will be admitted that there are some so-called "radicals" in the grange as in every other organization. At the last session of the national grange, held in Syracuse last November, an echo of the old granger days was heard when a few state masters proposed an indorsement of government ownership and operation of railroads. The conservative members of the order easily defeated the effort. So it may readily be seen that while Grangerism is not dead, there has been a change in the grange point of view.

The organization is strongly entrenched in Oregon, having many subordinate granges. It has at no time taken very kindly to radicalism as pertaining to government ownership of anything, although there are many faddists in its ranks. Its work in this state has mainly been in behalf of sane legislation and education not only for the farmer but for the entire public. The last session of the state grange effectually killed the non-partisan propaganda in this state.

No one knows just how many columns of good newspaper space are being wasted in advising the peace congress how to arrange things, but just the same those obstinate fellows at Versailles will pay no attention to any of the advice. The highbrows in office frequently treat the editors that way, with no thought of the revenge that is said to be sweet but is surely coming.

Twenty-four states have ratified the national prohibition amendment, of which nine are of the old south. What has become of the Jacksonian principle of state's rights?

Being naturally selfish as most humans are, it is difficult to understand why children object to getting an education and laying the foundation for advancement.

A great many men, who agree in principle with the idea of "women and children first," wish the thing were not overdone in their own households.

Of course, in warning us against repeating mistakes of the past, Senator Chamberlain overlooks the fact that we aren't going to have any more wars.

The present abundant supply of pure wheat bread is almost a hardship with butter at 70 cents a pound. As to biscuits, they are a dream of the past.

If anybody had an ounce of prevention for sale these days he would be sure to be a profiteer.

Then there is the kind of "educated man" who thinks he has a good library if all the book covers match in color.

The war may be over but you're not over with the war.

BOTH HEROINES DESPITE WEALTH

Carrying on in their war bit until asked to discontinue, Mrs. Vincent Astor and Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt Sr., two of America's wealthiest and best-known social leaders, have just returned from France. Both "tended tables" in a "Y" hut at the front. Both braved dangers, and never asked for relief. Both were decorated by the French authorities. They are here seen getting their first glimpse of the "beautiful lady," the Statue of Liberty, in New York harbor, as their boat arrived.

Maximum yields of potatoes in Powder River valleys were obtained with 7.79 inches of irrigation water, says the report of W. L. Powers, professor of soils at Oregon Agricultural college. With barley the greatest yield was obtained with 16.3 inches, and with timothy, 30.55 inches. The greatest profit is usually obtained with less water.

H. W. Snashall, president of the Farmers Mutual Fire Relief Association, reports the association has broken all former records in 1917. The annual statement shows 383 new members gained, 17 fire losses paid, aggregating $4911; $1,036,677 of insurance written, one assessment levied, and $700 invested in liberty bonds during the year. The association is entering its 14th year, and has over 4000 members carrying $4,250,000 insurance. It has made an annual saving of over 50 per cent to its members. At the annual meeting in January Andrew Brugger of Gresham was re-elected director for the ninth year. Farmers desiring to join may obtain information from H. W. Snashall, Gresham, R. A. or Herman Loeding, secretary, 409 Stock Exchange Bldg., Portland.—Adv.

AMERICA PICKED TO FLY ATLANTIC WITH THIS PLANE.

International authorities on air affairs are predicting that America will be the first nation to fly across the ocean in aeroplane. Here is the biggest aero-boat yet built, the N. C. 1, from the Glenn Curtiss plant. It has a wing tip of 126 feet and is 70 feet from propellers to tail. It has three engines and in a recent test carried fifty passengers all along the Atlantic coast. It can rise 2000 feet in ten minutes. It is expected to fly the Atlantic.
