NOT FOR ALL.

Many a fine lad in every community will never quite succeed in forgiving the unkind fate that barred him from overseas service in the great war. But these are not the only ones who must feel as if they had been balked out of opportunity to give full measure of patriotic service.

For example, pitiful stories are told of whole gangs of shipbuilders that, despite their patriotic willingness to work overtime, did not succeed in making more than the price of a $50 liberty bond for every man's week's work in their yards, while the most patriotic individuals could do no better, perhaps, than collect anywhere from $80 up to $200 in a week.

What, then, must be the feelings of such men when they read of a war worker in a Massachusetts yard who, being on piece work, and being put on a new machine and continued at his old rate of pay, actually succeeded in serving his country at the rate of $200 a day for some four months?

What must be the sensations of the plumbers who, being called in the first cold snap to fix up the pipes at one of the cantonments that had been most thoughtfully left without protection, and patriotically working all Saturday night and Sunday on time and a half or double time, could do no more than collect $125 or $130 for the job—what must they feel when they hear a degree of patriotism that the $200-a-day mark?

Then there are the young patriots, the errand boys, highly skilled, of course in their work, whose patriotic service seldom got beyond collecting $35 a week. Poor lads, how envious they must have been of the larger patriots—per se and par excellence—that got away with $200 a day for four months!

But the list of the disappointed is too long for recital. They tried hard enough, there self-sacrificing defenders of liberty, but not to all went the high honor of serving to the extent of earning pretty nearly 1000 thrice stamps a day—or collecting the price of them, rather—stamps that the lesser patriots purchased, of course, as many as they were able. Not for all was the patriotic achievement of taking over the price of four $50 liberty bonds every twenty-four hours for months—bonds that were purchased by sacrifice, in many instances, and that a generation will tax itself generously to redeem.

Not even the patriotic railroad men climbed to this height of disinterested service. Perhaps that was what "got" Mr. McAdoo. He tried—in all conscience, he tried—to enable the brotherhoods to serve with highest patriotic fervor, but he never got his men up to the $200 a day point. Why, McAdoo turns out to be the worst "piker" of the administration compared with the managers of that shipyard where opportunity was open for demonstration of love of country. But these high levels of service are not for all.

To make the world safe for democracy some must be content with $100 a week or even less. Others must even be quite satisfied to be shot to pieces at $30 a month and found. Not for all is the patriotism that runs a machine and collects for every day more than a private soldier receives in six months—that is, receives it when the government gets around to it. There are inequalities of opportunity to serve. The $100-a-week shipbuilder, or the $200-a-day machine worker, or the $125-a-day plumber had his chance to do his bit—and he did it. Angels might have done more, but they could have done no better than to "do" their government—which is what these "patriots" did.

CONSECRATED GROUND.

All the buoyant hope and the unfettered enthusiasm of the allied nations are laid upon a background that must live so long as memory endures, and pass on to generations to come—the background of a narrow strip of consecrated, cross-marked soil stretching from the North sea to Switzerland—God's Acre—the Western front.

Scarred, blasted, upturned as if by elemental forces, but soon to be restored to beauty and usefulness, the Western front goes down into the ages as the battleground of freedom.

There the Hun struck at the liberties of the world. There he was stopped. There, year in and year out, the trench lines extended from the sea to the mountain. There the hopes and fears, the fortitude and the courage, the faith and devotion and sacrificial service of free men were centered. Three millions of the world's best died. There the enemy of freedom sensed as by instinct his gathering doom.

In the spring of last year—less than a full year ago—with his material resources at full tide, he might have crushed the British in the Levant, he might have driven the Saloniki army into the sea. He might have crushed Italy. But he knew that all this would only prolong the war and that all his acquisitions in Russia were empty, unless he could achieve victory over that determined line of crusaders on the eastern borders of France. So he struck again and again, and still thrice more, putting his all into his terrible blows.

And there his strength was exhausted so that he could not help Bulgaria, Turkey, Austria. Pinned down, at last, to defense on this sacred ground, and powerless to stem the rising tide of disaster there, he saw his allies fall from him, one by one, in swift succession. And then his own end came on this narrow band of French and Belgian soil that he had desecrated by every hellish deed of brutality.

The scars of the war will be overgrown in time by fair cities and towns, peaceful farmsteads and new forests. The little crosses will pass, and stately monuments will mark the high points of the devotion they represent. Nature and industry will heal the ghastly wounds of the tortured earth. But so long as men cherish freedom of the soul this little area will be consecrated ground. Thither men will go. There they will tread softly. Thence they will draw inspiration to live and serve so that these dead shall not have died in vain, and that government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth.

Another wonderful thing about the climate around here is, just when you think old winter is going to settle down for a siege, it will burst out with jonquils, woodland lilies, pussy willows, and pansies. And when that happens you had better begin on the spring garden.

Would many of the incompetents, who make their living in public office, remain public charges if state and national affairs were put on a business basis?

The task of feeding Europe looms bigger when it is remembered what heavy feeders the Germans are.

SELLING LIBERTY BONDS.

When war was going on men were not only patriotic but prudent. They bought Liberty bonds, noted that the coupons were in place, and sat down to wait for the determination of the battles. Now that peace is assured, they are looking around and thinking of investments, extension of business and new fields of profits. There is a fine outlook for America in this and a good deal of danger.

The liberties are quoted around 95 on the New York market. This does not mean that anyone of common sense thinks less of the bonds than they did when they were bought; it means that some people see a chance for bigger profits, and are selling the bonds for almost any figure in order to get cash to start a store, or buy goods, or build, or take a partnership where a new partner means more capital. By losing 5 per cent, many of those selling expect to get into a position where they will make 15 or 20 per cent, perhaps.

The chances are that many who expect to make most are going to lose their money. "The greater the profit, the greater the certain risk" is a truth usually seen by those who have not believed it enough. Especially is it a true proverb as to any kind of paper security whatever. The first essential of a good investment is moderate returns. Then it isn't a bad idea to put your money where you can watch it.

When you send money far away, as to California for investment in some mining or oil region, it is apt to keep on going. Oregon has good chances for investments. If the small investor cannot make a "good buy" here he will do well to keep his money in the bonds, or the savings banks.

Another cause for low prices of bonds is the folly of men and women who are now beginning to react from a saving habit that the war developed and to exchange bonds for unnecessary things. Comparatively speaking, things are easy. The wolf of poverty seems to be far away. There is likely to be speculative, perhaps a spendthrift venturing period for a year or two, and many instances of disappointment and bankruptcy because people with no skill in the most baffling expert occupations—making money make money safely—have tried to do it.

But the liberties are going to be a very comfortable, home-like, steady proposition. They won't gush oil or pay 40 per cent quarterly dividends, or get you rich while you wait. But they will do more for you than any investment you are likely to make unless you use the money for your own business, especially if you are in the farming business. The price is down now—it will go up again. Uncle Sam never issued a bond that did not command a premium by the time it was ten years old. The recent issues will grow up well if you wait a while.

Just what sort of a president Pad-crowski will make for Poland we do not know. But we can say this, no American candidate for president could ever poll a majority vote if he attempted to go through a campaign with a head of hair like Pad's. We haven't forgotten Hughes' whiskers.

Counting today there are but eighteen days remaining before tax-paying time rolls along once more; and the person who fails to pay is like a doughnut with the entire rim eaten off.

The school children will soon begin to call the "flu" "Old Verdun," because they remember the French war slogan, "they shall not pass."

Surrendered guns and planes are not included in the boycott against Made-in-Germany goods.

War brides are just commencing to make the acquaintance of their husbands.

Gambling nowadays is a game of chance for more than one reason.

ATTY GENERAL GREGORY

United States Attorney-General, Thomas Watt Gregory, since 1914, has resigned his office and will return to the practice of the law. He will quit the cabinet on March 4. His successor will be named by the president and may be Frank L. Polk, at present acting secretary of state. Senator Lewis of Illinois is also mentioned as a probable successor.

There are difficulties ahead for all men and all nations in 1919, but the Gresham vicinity may smooth many of them for mankind by holding out the hope for a bumper strawberry crop.

We intended to keep the information confidential for awhile longer, but we have to say: The nation will go republican one year from next November.

Perhaps the bolsheviks are merely trying to make sure that they get the man who invented the safety razors.

Getting out of the war is very much like eating at a cafeteria and paying the cashier at the door.

The Poles who are marching on Berlin will be on the Spree before they get there.
