MEMORIAL DAY.

To properly observe Memorial Day let old and young give a pause to the thoughts of every day business or pleasure and spend the day in a manner fitting its sacred purpose.
 This year the day means more than it has meant other years.
 To the honor roll of the past, with its many names held in utmost reverence, there is added another, newer roll, that of 9,000,000 boys and men who died in the cause of world liberty, 53,000 of whom are our own American boys.
 We can never forget them. We are grateful. Let us honor the heroic dead, in honoring them we do honor to ourselves. Let us inculcate the spirit of reverence in the children and thus implant in them patriotism.

GOOD CITIZENSHIP DEPENDENT ON SCHOOLS.

The destinies of nations are molded in its schools.
 In 1914 began the final tests of the schools of the world. It was with fear and trembling that the educators watched developments which followed so speedily one after the other as the war progressed.
 In pre-war times American schools were on occasions disparagingly compared with those of Europe, and even the notion prevailed generally that in order to get the best in education one had to go abroad for it. Therefore, it was with painful anxiety that the American teachers awaited for the world's verdict. Each began a search of his own consciousness to see what he had been teaching. His work would be known. Had it been for good or evil? Had they, so they queried, taught so well that the nation's statesmen could guide the ship of state safely through the seething maelstrom which threatened every government? Had they in their crowded curriculum given sufficient time and emphasis to the teaching of righteous citizenship? With the young men lay the answer. And such an answer! The teacher knows, and the world knows that our schools built and built exceedingly well.
 Our boys, our men, passed 100 per cent perfect. Our schools saved a nation and the world.

ROOSEVELT HIGHWAY.

The Roosevelt Coast Military Highway bill, now before the people, passed both houses without a negative vote. Even the mote-eyed politician could see the immeasurable benefits to be derived from opening up the vast region west of the coast ranges.
 A friend, a former Greshamite, in a letter recently from a coast town, writes: "I have been so bottled up by muddy and impassable roads for so long that I have almost given up hope of being able to drive out to see you or to have you drive in to see me. There are only a few months in the year in the very dry season when roads are passable. I do not think this is just selfishness but just human nature to want to see our friends once in a while. However, if we can get this highway measure to carry it will solve our problem, and at the same time benefit the whole state of Oregon."
 Sure, Mike! We'll do all we can to help you out. We want to be able to visit back and forth with our neighbors on the coast. If the measure had no other merit we'd favor it in order to perpetuate the name by which the highway is to be called, but it is meritorious from every standpoint.
 What business has the government in a democracy to do more than govern? A republican form of government is unlike any other. Its principal object should be to insure liberty without partiality to all its citizens. Let the citizens attend to business.
 Even the amusement specialists have gotten the "back to the country" idea.

Greetings Carried by Air Ships.

Greetings from thrifty America to thrifty Great Britain were carried by the navy airplanes when they started on the long trip across the Atlantic. The navy fliers carried a letter from Harold Braddock, director of the Savings division of the Treasury Department, written in behalf of the American Thrift campaign, to the Right Hon. Sir Robert Kindersley, K. B. E., chairman of the British National War Savings committee. The letter read:

"Greetings from the people of the United States who, inspired by patriotic investment in government securities, are now deeply interested in the study and practice of Thrift.

"Our citizens are holding for maturity more than $1,000,000,000 in War Savings certificate stamps and at the same time are reaping the benefit of past systematic saving and investment through the disbursement by the government this year of some $89,000,000 interest on Liberty Bonds and Victory Notes.

"I rejoice to say to you that the broad popular interest in this movement which will make Thrift an enduring part of our national life, is manifesting itself through national publications of every kind as well as through the continued purchase of Thrift Stamps and War Savings Stamps.

"We find much profit in studying the campaign now going forward so splendidly among the people of the United Kingdom, for the success of which I beg leave to send my heartiest good wishes, by trans-Atlantic airplane."

Life Investment.

A few months ago, while the war was still in active progress, an Englishman stopped to buy some tickets from a Boy Scout.

"And how are Scouts getting along now?" said the purchaser.

"Finely, sir, thank you," said the little chap proudly. "Five of us have died already!"

This rather unusual answer was but the natural result of the environment of self-sacrifice in which the boy had been living. To have a chance to give one's life was indeed to be "getting along finely."

Lieut. Col. Whittlesey, who commanded the "Lost Battalion," said recently: "The finest thing about the entire experience in Europe was the fact that we were all engaged in a great, unselfish enterprise. Selfish interests were forgotten and everyone stood to share his meager comforts or to undergo the greatest hardship or dangers for the sake of the common good."

The war has helped us to learn over again the lesson which Jesus tried so long ago to teach his followers, namely, "Whosoever shall lose his life, the same shall save it."

We shall make a serious mistake if as young people we imagine that now we can settle down into lives of luxury and selfish indulgence and through such a process gain real joy or genuine success. The great fundamental principles of life which were so thoroughly tested in the war remain ever the same. The only true satisfactions are to be found in service and not in selfish gratification. This is not an easy lesson to learn, but it is an important one.

The world's needs are today so great that for any young person to shape his life without due regard for them is to insure failure at the beginning of the race.

We have been engaged in a great war to make the world safe for democracy. In our own country, where democracy has succeeded best, we have been dependent upon the Christian home, the public school, and the church to build up those qualities of character, without which democracy will ever be of little value.

Today, however, almost two-thirds of the people of the world have either never heard of Jesus Christ or have an entirely misleading conception of him; one-half the world's population over six years of age cannot read or write any language, and throughout much of the world anything corresponding to a Christian home is unknown.

These are some of the conditions which you and I face. And the biggest job in all the world just now is to help to set some of these wrong conditions right.

The millions of money raised for the Centenary will amount to little unless young men and women give their lives. And these young men and women must come from the Sunday school and Epworth League. They must come from schools like our own, from classes like those now assembled in this room and from ordinary homes like those from which we come.

It is said democrats will co-operate with republican leaders for an early repeal of the 10 per cent luxuries tax.

The reconstruction program of the republican congress starts out right with the political enfranchisement of the women.

GREATEST PAGEANT OF MODERN TIMES

What it is planned to make the greatest world exhibition ever conceived will be held at Columbus, Ohio, June 20-July 7.

Known as the Centenary Celebration, and celebrating jointly the completion of the Methodist centenary's $105,000,000 campaign for the purpose of rebuilding the world and the centennial of American missions, that is the 100th anniversary of the establishment of Methodist missions in America, plans are being made to entertain at least 100,000 Methodists a day. Every phase of mission work in every country in which Methodism is at work will be presented.

There will be erected a complete Chinese city with its great walls and gates; a pagoda, temples, shops, schools, hospital, theater, restaurant, homes, peopled by many native Chinese. In like manner will be shown villages from India, Korea, Africa and the Philippines peopled by groups of natives from those cities which have been brought to America by the Methodist Centenary.

Motion pictures will be shown in a gigantic oval, where 100,000 people can sit at one time. The picture screen will be the largest in the world, being 125 feet high.

The work of Christianity at home and abroad will be shown in every phase. There will be gigantic pageants participated in by thousands of natives.

Motion pictures, directed by D. W. Griffith will be taken of the celebration. Mr. Griffith will also assist in the pageants. Speakers of world-wide renown will be heard at the celebration gatherings.

The Methodist centenary celebration will be by all odds the greatest religious enterprises ever presented. It is expected to defray its own costs. Immediately after its conclusion the tribes of natives from different lands will be sent to their homes by the Methodist centenary.

PRUNE TROUBLE IS DUE TO LACK OF MOISTURE

Prune trees that failed to bloom and delayed leafing are suffering from lack of moisture and food following the last two years of exceptionally dry weather. The remedy recommended by Prof. C. I. Lewis, chief of horticulture at O. A. C., to the many growers asking help, is early and continued tillage, supplemented as needed, by use of fertilizer and heavy pruning.

Some growers thought their trees were dead but later reported that the leaf buds were slowly developing. The foliage is often sparse, and indications are that the trees will be weak for several years unless drastic steps are taken to revive their vigor.

Bearing fruit with but scant rains from late March till after prune harvest was a severe strain on the trees, especially on light or shallow soils. Functional troubles appeared. The setting fruit was often unusually heavy—a sign of food and moisture shortage—but the drop was premature and very heavy. The fruit turned reddish, or showed watery spots and malformation. Many fell off in July and again later in the summer. The trees were left too weak to start fruit buds or but a limited number of weak leaf buds.

The soil in those orchards should be plowed and worked down early with cultivation up to midsummer. If the damage is rather severe sowing 3 to 5 pounds nitrate of soda about each tree and working it into the soil is favored. For trees still more heavily damaged heavy pruning to balance the top with the enfeebled root system may be necessary. And on trees showing but feeble life practical dehorning to force out a new top may be practiced. In three or four years the tree may become vigorous again.
