WOMEN FARMERS.

Farming, like shoeing horses and climbing telephone poles and playing baseball has until recently been held a man's job.

Serious doubts were expressed as to whether women could manage farms, handle stock, do chores and harvest crops in competition with their big brothers.

The farmerettes have proved that a woman can do anything on a farm that a man can do and frequently do it better.

But the real proof of woman's adaptability for farm work and management will be found in the pig, bee, calf, corn and garden clubs of this and many other sections of country.

One girl took a small pig, cared for it until it was of marketable size, and made it gain two and a half pounds a day. An average rather better than the general hog raiser contrives to reach.

We see that several girls succeeded so well with bees that they converted their fathers to new and better methods, and in some instances took over the farm apiculture for their own.

A girl of 12 manages one of the prize Jersey herds of the country.

The gardens of the girls produce as abundantly, and give as high quality fruit and produce as do those of their brothers.

Girls raise and select seed corn that stands high enough to sell to adult corn farmers at a premium.

It is not unlikely that in a few years when these girls, thousands of them now in school clubs, grow up, the ranks of the producers will be augmented by skilled women workers, and instead of the woman-managed farm being a rarity it will become quite commonplace.

Indeed, there is no task in the field that is more arduous than that for years performed by women in the farm kitchen, dairy or back porch, and the woman will lose nothing by trading her washboard for a riding plow or a tractor with all the implements that go with it. Then the man can try his hand at the washing or, what is more likely, get for the household work modern machinery such as he demands for the farm work.

Local coal dealers inform us that coal has just gone up 25 cents a ton. On August first a 15 cent raise is expected and the mine owners state that it will go still higher later in the month. Wouldn't that make you hot? The idea of raising the price of coal in such hot weather, anyway. However, it will probably be needed in a few months whatever the price.

THE FARMER AND PRICES.

A little circular compiled by the National City Bank of New York City is sent out each month by the First State Bank to its patrons. It is worth careful reading as it contains valuable and authentic information regarding money matters, business conditions and the cost of living. In the July issue it is stated that the whole industrial situation is largely supported at present by agricultural prosperity, and the latter is supported by the foreign demand. How quickly this may change has been shown by the fall in dressed beef and beef cattle which has occurred since the first of April, as the result of the falling off of exports and sales to the armies. It might be supposed that the demobilized soldiers would eat as much beef as private citizens as they did in the army, but apparently they do not, and the foreign private demand is chiefly for pork products. Since April there has occurred one of the most sharp and severe declines in beef cattle ever known in the trade, inflicting heavy losses upon farmers who had prepared cattle for market upon high-priced corn.

The position of the farmer in the financial world is made clear. It is further commented that agricultural products respond very quickly and certainly to the conditions of supply and demand. A decline in the prices of farm products will affect the purchasing ability of the farming districts in the general markets. The theory that everybody else can fix his own pay and the farmer will have to pay it will prove a fallacy. The farmer cannot pay out more than he gets and one-third of the population of this country live either on farms or in rural communities directly dependent upon agriculture. If when farm products come down the attempt is made to keep all other prices up, the effect will be inevitable—a decline of distribution with resulting unemployment. Domestic trade as well as foreign trade consists of an exchange of commodities and services, and trade is bound in the long run to reach an equilibrium.

The report of the International Harvester company shows that its wage scale is now double what it was before the war. The farmer is paying this scale when he buys implements, and he is paying similar wages for railway transportation, clothes, shoes, and generally for what he buys. These wages are justified while the farmer receives present prices for his products, but, it does not require a gift of prophecy to foretell that if his receipts are cut in two his purchases will be correspondingly reduced. The only fair and rational adjustment will be by having a general revision of costs to correspond with the reduction in farm products as the latter occurs. There can be no injustice in the economic world without retribution.

Y. M. C. A. PRAISED.

Perhaps this is the story of Dave Duncan, a fearless young lawyer who went overseas to serve the American doughboy as best he could, or perhaps this is just a letter from a soldier boy to his mother. You can judge after reading it. It was written by Sergeant Major Arthur G. Halsey, 2d Bn. Hdq. 60th Inf., A. E. F. from Luxembourg: "Now mother, I'm going to tell you something, and I'm ready at any time to back up my statements to any one at all. You have entirely the wrong idea about the Y. M. C. A. The Y has done some wonderful things over here. They faced a gigantic task, and did their work well. I'm not speaking about my outfit alone, because I've seen it time and again in others."

"In my battalion we have a Y man named Dave Duncan, St. Mihiel, Argonne, Trenches in the Vosges. Everywhere that we saw action saw Dave there too. At St. Mihiel he drove an auto full of chocolates and cigarettes through three lines of captured German trenches. The battle was still going on between a Hun and two American planes, with the M. G. bullets coming down all over the place. The Hun batteries were trying to range us, and the H. E. and shrapnel shells were landing every minute. They were coming so thick that every one was ordered under what cover he could find. The American guns were battering the last line of resistance about two kilometers ahead, and we waiting for the order to go and get 'em. Up came Dave, with his auto, and in spite of the fact that he was told to get under cover by the commanding officer, he got up on the seat, and hollered for the boys to come and get their stuff. No one had any money; hadn't been paid for two months. The boys lined up, and they had to keep six feet apart to lessen the danger of casualties from bursting shells. Dave's machine had come to a stop, for the simple reason that there were so many dead Germans that he couldn't go any further. His front wheels were on a dead Hun's chest, and there were dead men and horses by the thousand on all sides. We got our smokes and chocolate at a time when we were all wild for a smoke and hungry as hell. Is this neglect of duty?"

"I met Dave during the Argonne-Duse offensive. It was the night my regiment made their famous crossing of the river in the face of the machine guns. It was raining and cold and everywhere the ground was covered with dead. The Germans had gone stark crazy, and were dropping shells as fast as they could throw them over the top everywhere. In a mad attempt to stop the already victorious American drive. It was the most hideous night I have ever lived through. A night that will keep me awake for years, I think, and there on the German side of the river was Dave; he was giving away hot chocolate and cigarettes to any one who came by. How he got the stuff there, I don't know unless he carried it on his back; but the fact remains that he was there, giving us hot drinks and smokes and yelling to the boys to go ahead and give them hell. Dave swam that river where men were going West by the hundred. He was dirty, ragged, hadn't shaved for a week, was lousy, wet and cold, but he was THERE, and he is all man.

"Another little incident about the Y. Since the armistice was signed Dave got his papers and permission to return home. The war was over and his part was finished, and this is what he did: He sent his papers back, with the notice that he would go home when the 5th Division did and not before. Dave is a lawyer, has plenty of money and a wife and home waiting for him and yet he is here in this damned little country, when he might just as well be at home, and all because he cares more for our comfort than his own. If that is neglect of duty, then I never did mine, and if he is not a man, then I never want to be one. And the organization that is backing him up, the American Y. M. C. A., is just like Dave.

"Mother, the first hand clasp I received when I struck England was that of a Y man, and the first good word was from the same source. I was a pretty lonely and discouraged boy about then too. The first good American voice I heard in France, at La Havre, was the Y man there. It's been the same all the way through. The Y men are working their heads off for us over here, and all the credit in the world is coming to them. What the Y is doing in the States, I don't know and I don't care, but over here they are doing their bit and doing it well and have been. I'm for the Y. M. C. A. strong and no over in the States can tell me different, because I'm here. I've seen it a thousand times and I'm seeing it today. While I'm writing this letter I'm smoking a Y cigar, this morning I ate Y candy and cakes, and I've got Y gum in my pockets, and Y tobacco for my pipe. I'm using Y towels and soap.

"Wait till I get home and then bring the stay-at-home Y critics to me, and I'll damn soon tell them. The Salvation Army, K. of C., and others did their part; I wouldn't for the moment belittle their efforts, because they have done well, but the whole 5th Division, and they are 28,000 strong, will back the Y against them all."

Postmaster General is Quitter.
 Action of Postmaster General Burleson in suddenly ordering the telegraph and telephone properties restored to their owners has caused surprise here.

Two reasons are assigned as to why Mr. Burleson did not wait for the legislation which Congress was preparing to enact.

One is that the Postmaster General, seeing the repeal bill would be passed immediately concluded he would forestall it.

The other is that, with a telegraph strike begun in a number of states and a nation-wide strike threatened, the Postmaster General got panicky and concluded he would escape responsibility.

President Koenenkamp, of the Commercial Telegraphers' Union, said the action of Mr. Burleson in restoring the lines to owners in the face of a nation-wide strike caused by the Burleson policies "would indicate that he is a quitter."

The tangle in which Mr. Burleson has succeeded in getting the wires is not going to be an easy one to unravel. Latest developments in respect to it have increased the pressure from Democrats high in the administration to drive Mr. Burleson out of the cabinet.

The Joy of Living.
 To enjoy life we must have good health. No one can reasonably hope to get much real pleasure out of life when his bowels are clogged a good share of the time and the poisons that should be expelled are absorbed into the system, producing headaches and indigestion. A few doses of Chamberlain's Tablets will move the bowels, strengthen the digestion and give you a chance to realize the real joy of living. Try it.—Adv.

Farmers Mutual Makes Big Gain.
 The annual report of the Farmers Mutual Fire Relief Ass'n of Portland filed with the Insurance Department of Oregon shows $1,301,634.00 insurance written by the Ass'n in 1918, and 475 new members gained during the year. The Ass'n is now in its 15th year, and has about five million insurance in force.

Since its organization, the Ass'n has made an annual saving of over 50% as compared with board rates on farm insurance, to its members. H. W. Snashall, president of the Ass'n, is agent for Gresham and vicinity. The office is at 409 Stock Exchange Bldg., corner 3d and Yamhill streets, Portland, Phone Main 5006.—Adv.
