Official paper of the Town of Gresham. Entered as second-class matter March 3, 1911, at the Postoffice at Gresham, Oregon, under the Act of March 3, 1879.

This issue completes the ninth year of the publication of the Outlook. It has been a twice-a-week paper from its beginning, has been under the same management, and, unlike anything else you can buy, has not increased in price.

H. L. St. Clair is from another of those centers of which Portland is a suburb: Gresham—Gibbs and Scribes (published by students of Journalism, Eugene.)

THIS WAY OUT.

The civilized world is today facing a condition economically more serious and trying than ever before experienced. Most lines of business find themselves hedged in on many sides and just when the demand seems to be greatest their possibilities are most limited.

According to Howard E. Pigg, assistant United States attorney general, there are five much more serious factors leading to high costs than profiteering. The order in which he enumerates them is as follows: Increased volume of money and credits; wide increase of wages, due partly to war necessities and government wage scales; lessened world production; increased cost of distribution; reckless extravagance and a spirit of speculation; profiteering.

This is all very explicit. The order is his idea of the relative importance of the causes named. Not all will agree with him but there can be no doubt that the main cause is the increased demand along with the lessened production due to the war. The production due to war demand was largely wasted. The increased circulation of money has led to higher wages and unprecedented extravagance. This in itself cuts down production for it destroys efficiency. War conditions have given the whole world an impetus unknown before. Production has not caught up with the greatly increased demand for staples and will not do so for some time.

The present paper situation illustrates this explanation. Paper is scarce and high. The demand is greater than ever. Newspapers and magazines have greatly increased in size and circulation. All lines of business are seeking the benefits of extensive advertising. Printing is sought for on a larger scale than ever. At the same time all printing stocks and raw materials for paper have been greatly depleted because of low production and excessive waste during the war. The mills are farther behind today than ever. They are so hopelessly swamped that they notify their customers that they cannot promise delivery within four to eight months and even give notice they cannot accept further orders for some time to come.

The one great lesson for us all is to cut out the waste, curb our demands and increase our efficiency as much as possible.

A visit to the automobile show is likely to give one the impression that the automobile business is the greatest thing in the world today.

The Stranger Within Thy Gates.

The following parable—or satire—was submitted to the Outlook by a subscriber who has observed the strangely indifferent attitude of the average person toward the school teacher. The writer, who lives in a country district, deprecates the fact that the teacher, who should have the fullest sympathy of parents and patrons of the school, is often left out of the social activities of the community and is, in fact, a very lonely person.

The Gods have sent, Zernal, one of their messengers, to earth with a special charge at this time to see what the school teachers are doing.

Bert Zernal wanders about unable to find the teachers. At last he knocks at the door of the king's palace and asks "Where are the school teachers? How shall I know them from other mortals?"

"Oh, that is easy enough," replies the king. "School teachers are quite different from other mortals."

"How is that?" asks the messenger.

"Well," answers the king, "when the gods decided to make school- teachers, for some reason never explained to mortals, they selected an entirely different clay from that used in making other mortals."

"What is this clay like?" again questions the messenger.

"It is a cold bluish clay having the peculiar property of never becoming warm," replies the king.

"What are school teachers?" again asks the messenger. "They are mortals," replies the king, "who leave their homes and go out among strangers (much as pastors of churches do) and in buildings provided for the purpose, instruct children in the ways of mortals."

"You say they go among strangers. Do the people interested in the schools see to the housing of the teachers?"

"Oh, no," again answers the king; "there is no need of that since teachers need very little along this line."

"And how do they obtain food such as vegetables and fruit?" continued the questioner.

"They really have very little need of food either, and can get along without any if none is available," replies the king.

"These teachers being far from their homes, no doubt are recognized and welcomed into the homes and social life of the community in which they teach," remarked the persistent inquirer.

"Not at all," says the king, growing impatient with the messenger. "I told you before that teachers are made of a different clay from that of other mortals, and have not like passions with them. They have no need of friendliness, encouragement, comfort or sociability. They pursue the even tenor of their way, appearing in the schoolhouse from somewhere at the appointed hour, and disappear at night.

"And when their year's work is ended, they go back to the 'dark clay' from which they sprang, unwept, un- honored and unsung."

"No, mortals need have no thought for 'the stranger that is within their gates.'"

And, satisfied at last, Zernal departed to seek the school teachers.

A Portland woman heard the following conversation at a butcher shop one day: "Hey, Charlie, who ya giv'n that bum meat to?" asked the proprietor. "Mrs. Peachtree," replied the butcher, who was wrapping the package. "Well, don't send her that. She's particular. Send it to Mrs. Appleboom. She never kicks; takes any old thing; does all her shopping over the phone and don't know one cut from another."

Housewives, why not go to the store or market and see what you are getting? Telephone orders are very convenient, but the careful housewife will see the article before she orders it.

Give the children plenty of milk and plenty of dairy products and keep them healthy. A cup of hot cocoa after school may be a little bother to make but it will be a good tonic this winter for the growing boy or girl. A glass of milk and a cracker will keep the child good natured. And, mothers, when you are tired from housework or shopping take a glass of milk yourself. It keeps everyone good natured. Many a man and woman gets "peevish" because he needs the stimulant of a little milk.

Housewives, you needn't be kickers or unreasonable, but see that you get what you pay for. Study up on the cuts and study how to make delicious and nourishing dishes from the cheaper cuts. A cheap cut of meat, well cooked and seasoned, is better than an expensive cut poorly cooked and poorly served.
