Official paper of the Town of Gresham Official paper of the Town of Fairview.

Entered as second-class matter March 3, 1911, at the Postoffice at Gresham, Oregon, under the Act of March 3, 1879.

Multnomah County Pomona grange, at a recent all-day session, not only endorsed the relief bill for higher education in Oregon, but requested its nine subordinate granges to go out in their communities and work for the bill.

Governor Lowden Discusses Campaign Issues.

With the Oregon primaries just two months off there is increasing interest in campaign issues. No clearer statement of the presidential issues can be found than the following by Governor Frank O. Lowden:

"The government of the United States needs today," the governor said, "a business administration conforming to the old-fashioned idea of Americanism. I believe in government according to the constitution, I don't believe the time will ever come when we will need to suspend any of the rights set forth in that document."

"The rights of free speech, free assembly and free press must be maintained. Any citizen should have the right to express his political views, and to bring others to his belief, if he can do so by peaceable persuasion."

"The chief problem of Americanization is one of education. The man who thoroughly understands what America means is little apt to be a transmitter of revolutionary ideas."

"I am in favor of letting in all the immigrants who want to come to America, provided they adhere to the principles of American government. We who are here and acquainted with those principles should make a special effort to see that the newcomer speedily learns them."

"We can't expect a foreigner to like this country unless he gets a decent home and a decent wage. The success of any industry can no longer be measured by dollars and cents. The only true measure is the well being of the men who work in it."

"The ownership of private property is an economic motive for which no satisfactory substitute has been found. Private property is essential to civilization. The greater the number of people owning property the higher the civilization."

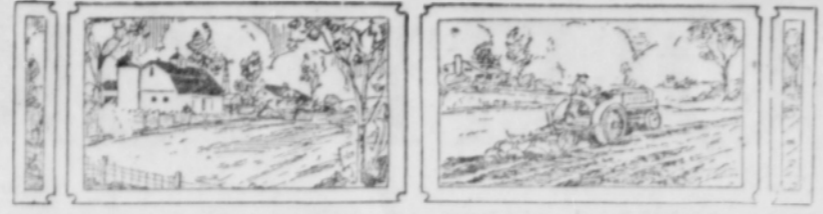

"There is only one sure way of bringing down prices," he said. "That is to produce more and consume less. This is not a matter for legislation. It is a matter for individual concerted initiative. It may take time for the people to realize that they have got to buckle down and each do his own part in working out his salvation, but I am confident the realization will soon come."

"What the government can do to help is to enforce the most rigid economy in its management of public affairs. Taxes must come down and the character of taxation must be altered. Excess profits taxes in the form in which they are now imposed play a considerable part in keeping up prices."

"I think we are trying to pay off our war debt too fast. I believe it should be funded so that the next generation will have to bear part of the obligation. The great war was fought not only for the men and women of today, but for those of tomorrow. The future should help pay for the benefits we hand down to it."

The Governor declared in favor of a protective tariff for such industries as are necessary to national well being, the tariff to be no greater, however, than the difference in cost of production at home and abroad.

"This difference," he said, "should be arrived at by experts, not by legislators."

Children's Story THE STORY THE DEWDROPS TOLD

(Written for the United States Garden Army, Department of the Interior).

Maria Meets the Dusty Fairy. Mothermine and Dolly and Maria MacDougal were taking an early walk in the U. S. G. A. garden. Dolly trotted along by the side of Mothermine, holding her hand, but Maria scampered about as if she couldn't be in enough places at once.

Maria seemed very much excited about something. She made funny little side-wise jumps. She would run as fast as she could for a minute and then pretend to fall down in the grass. She chased a butterfly. She put her paw on a toad, but she didn't like the feel of his cold skin, so she ran away again.

"I don't know, Dolly," said Mothermine. "What made you ask that?" "Why, she acts just like she could see something over there in the corner. Don't you see how funny she is?" She runs up to that bunch of dusty looking plants and dances around, and then she lays her ears back just like she does when I rub her head. I'm sure she sees something there.

"Well, suppose you go over and look. I will go back into the house. Fairies hardly ever come to see grown-ups. Perhaps you will be more likely to see one if I go away."

"Oh, no—please stay," cried Dolly. But Mothermine had many things to do and she went into the house. Dolly followed Maria into the corner of the garden. Maria certainly was "acting-up." Her hair was all fuzzy on her back and her tail was twice as large as usual.

"Maria," said Dolly, "what on earth is the matter with you?" "R-r-r-r-r," said Maria.

Now Dolly knew "cat talk" pretty well. She was sure that Maria was pleased about something. She looked at the spot upon which Maria's yellow eyes were fixed. It was just as she had thought—there was a Fairy, and Maria could see her. More than that, the Fairy was talking to Maria. I won't try to tell you how Maria's talk sounded. I will only tell you what it meant.

"I am so glad you have come into this garden," said Maria. "So many people forget about cats when they plant a garden. Did Billy bring you here?" "No," said the Fairy. "The wind brought me. I came very near being torn up for a weed, but Fatherbob saw me and told them to let me stay. He said I wouldn't make any trouble and that I would be good for you if you should get sick. Fatherbob said that more herbs should be grown in gardens—for instance, Thyme, lavender, and rosemary."

"Fatherbob is a nice man," said Maria. "He lets me sleep on the cushion of his chair in the library. One day when I was asleep there he picked up the cushion and put it on another chair. And he sat in his chair without any cushion so I could go on sleeping. I like him."

Dolly thought that was very good of her father. She was interested in this Fairy. The Fairy was not quite so pretty as some she had seen, but she had a very bright, snappy expression. Her dress was rather dull shade of green with a good deal of fringe on it. It looked as if it had been sprinkled over with fine dust. "Maria," said the Fairy, "I hope you are a good cat and do not try to catch the garden Ace or any of his family?"

"No indeed," said Maria; "but may I catch the field mice?" "Yes—if you will not make them suffer by playing with them. They make a great deal of trouble in a garden—yes, you may catch the field mice."

"Oh, I'm just crazy about you," said Maria. She turned over on her back and began to roll about on the dusty-looking leaves of the plant. "Maria—Maria—" cried Dolly. "Oh, what is the matter with her? She acts as if she was having a fit!"

"No indeed, my dear," said the Fairy with a laugh. "She is only happy to have a Catnip bed to roll on. Maria is a very lucky cat. I hope she will remember what I told her about the garden Ace and the other air-friends. She must never, never touch one of them. You must be sure to feed her well and keep her happy so she will not want to disobey me."

"I will be the best cat in the world," said Maria, "because I have this nice catnip bed to play in—that will keep me out of mischief. Herbs are fine! I hope the little boys and girls of the United States School Garden Army will plant sage, thyme, rosemary, dill, catnip and many herbs."

WESLEY M. WIRE WRITES BEAUTIFUL VERSES

The following beautiful tribute to Oregon was written by Wesley M. Wire of Newberg, Oregon, and was published in a recent number of the Pacific Christian Advocate.

Mr. Wire owns and operates one of the largest egg-producing farms in the state. Several years ago possibly 10 or 12, Mr. Wire started with a very few fowls and now has one of the best known poultry farms in the state. He is a brother of Rev. Melvin T. Wire who was pastor of the Gresham Methodist church five or six years ago. His father Rev. M. C. Wire is one of the pioneer ministers in this state.

In spite of the many duties which fill the time of a successful poultryman Mr. Wire has taken the time to write the following inspired lines to his home state.

Oregon, My Homeland.

Oregon, thou land of conquest From primeval nature's sway, Conquered by the dauntless spirit Of the men who led the way

Over plain and mountain fastness To the homeland of the West, Lewis, Clark and Lee and Whitman Ever dear your names shall rest.

Chorus Oregon, my own, my homeland I will ever sing of thee.

Land in every good abounding Thou art best from sea to sea.

Oregon, thou land of mountains Flashing back the sunset's glow From thy azure-piercing snow peaks Guarding hill and vale below

Rushing torrents, foaming, plunging, Furrow down the mountain side, Giant firs and spruce and cedars Lift their towering heads in pride.

Oregon, thou land of rivers Winding from their mountain home Through the fertile plains and valleys To be lost in ocean's foam, O, Columbia and Willamette, Stately rivers of the West, Banks of beauty guide four current, Commerce thrives upon your breast.

Oregon, thou land of plenty, Land of sunshine and of showers, Land of apples and of cherries, Loganberries, walnuts, flowers; Land of fields and mines and forests Pouring out a stream of wealth, Land of mild and balmy climate, Land of roses and of health.

DID YOU KNOW that last year Oregon-grown rhubarb sold as high as $1-3c per pound wholesale? Which price represents a greater per centage increase in sales value than that of any fruit. The fact that from the rhubarb stalk a healthful and wholesome beverage is made may account in part for the increased demand. I can supply large roots of the Victoria Mammoth rhubarb at 5c each or half crowns representing three or more roots, each 15c. Phone R. M. Randall, 159, or address Portland, R. A. Box 366.

Announcement.

Having sold my half interest in the Gresham Steam Laundry to E. E. Hart, I have severed all my relations with the business.

EDWARD A. REINECK.
