Entered as second-class matter March 3, 1911, at the Postoffice at Gresham, Oregon, under the Act of March 3, 1879.

It was the occasion of deep regret when the courts decided that the Clackamas county bond issue voted at the primary election was illegal and invalid, because the county is in great need of road improvement and at last reached the point of voting bonds to meet the needs. An effort is being made to obtain a rehearing of the suit which was instituted to test the validity of the bonds in the hope that new facts may be presented to lead to a reversal of the decision.

An adjourned meeting of the town council will be held tonight and one of the main questions to be discussed will be the rushing of the plans for the auto parking grounds.

It is the general feeling that the plans should be carried out as soon as possible in order that some use may be made of the grounds this summer. The season is rapidly advancing and if action is delayed very long the auto camping season will be past for this year.

At the meeting tonight the question will be fully discussed and it is hoped that there will be no further delays.

There is very little question but what Gresham will be on the route of the new loop highway and there will be more and more need of accommodations for tourists. If Gresham does not prepare to serve these people, they will go through to other towns.

As a matter of business policy, as town pride or as both, every citizen should encourage the erection of adequate buildings to care for those who will apply for camping sites here.

Probably the smallest automobile now in service is that one built by Fritz Reuter of San Antonio, Texas, who operates a large auto repair shop there. Mr. Reuter has a young son, and he was prompted to build the miniature car by a request on the part of Reuter Junior some two years ago. The machine has only recently been completed.

Saving discarded parts picked up in the repair shop over this period of time, Mr. Reuter has succeeded in producing a very complete car which is operated by electric motor and storage battery. There are parts of many makes of cars used in its construction, neither Fords nor Pierce-Arrows being neglected. A statuette of the well-known "Time to Re-Tire" boy, made on for Fisk Tires, has been mounted on the rear of the car.

School teachers in several parts of the state have written the Associated Industries office in Portland saying they have found the new business directory issued by the organization handy as a geography text book. It is found useful in illustrating the kind of products from each section of the state.

The adage of the man who can build a better mouse trap is working out with the J. M. Leach Iron Works of Portland. The plant has recently perfected a novel sash weight which has become so popular that the capacity of the plant is to be doubted to meet the demands of the trade.

Portland ranks second among the coffee roasting centers of the Pacific Coast but is the only large port on the coast without direct steamship connection with the coffee producing districts of South America.

You think you are a pretty valuable member of the community, but if your services and talents were put up for sale without any prestige or pull or property, how much would they bring "under the hammer"?

Ten wooden vessels built in the Portland district were recently selected for the trans-Atlantic coal trade.

The harmful gossip is one hundred degrees lower than the man who didn't know it was loaded.

CHILDREN'S STORY

The "Humbug" and the Bee Aeroplane.

Part II. "How impolite!" Little-Girl was really shocked, as she had been taught to be considerate of others, which is the real de-fini-tion of good manners.

"Well, you couldn't blame the poor little beetle. He had to have the proper food, and his mother hadn't sealed it up in his nest, as most mother insects do. He really was worse off than an orphan at an early age," and the little Elf Man leaned back in his grassy nest and fanned himself with the tip of a grass blade.

"How did you learn about him—did you follow him to the Bee Hive?" asked Little-Girl.

"Follow him!" the Elf Man looked hurt and indignant. "Follow him—I should say not! Didn't I tell you that I knew lots of secrets?"

"What became of the beetle, and why did he have to go to the bee's home to get the right food so that he could turn into a blister beetle?" asked Big-Boy.

"Now that," said the Elf Man, "is one of the secrets of Nature. His mother was born lazy. She didn't bustle and hunt around to make a nest in just the right place so that he could get the proper food. No, indeed; she laid her eggs in a field and went off and left the babies to shift for themselves. So when Tri-ung-u-lin came out into the world he climbed up a flower stalk and watched for a bee."

The little Elf scratched the end of his nose with his grass-leaf fan and looked wise.

"How did he know he had to eat bee bread?" asked Little-Girl. "I think bread and honey is nice."

"Ah, that is another of Nature's secrets. Tri-ung-u-lin knew quite as the human baby knows he has to have milk, well as that he had to take his strange ride to get his baby food. He had to find a bee. He had to ride in a bee-aeroplane or he wouldn't ever have become a blister beetle. Never at all."

And the Elf Man slipped a heartsease seed into his baby morning-glory mouth.

"Does he blister you if you touch him?" asked Boy.

"Oh, no," said the Elf-Man, "not at all, but the Earth Doctors catch him and his brothers and crush them into a paste and make a plaster that is put on sick people when they need to be blistered to draw some poison out of their systems. 'Usually,' and he nodded his small head wisely, 'the Earth People have done something foolish or they wouldn't be sick. They haven't followed the laws of health. And it is their own fault, for the United States Bureau of Education is willing to teach them. I am told by the Dictionary Man that there is no excuse for ignorance. Children are taught in the home and at school. Books and papers are full of kind, helpful things to make people healthy and happy. Yet some boys and girls carry millions of germs under their finger nails. You may see them thro' the 'Enchanted Glass. How terrible. It quite upsets my nerves,' and the Elf Man took another heartsease seed out of his tiny pocket.

Big-Boy had put one grimy hand behind his back. "You see, Elf Man, a boy has to use his hands for so many things and then if he digs in the garden he gets mussy, and, of course, well, you can't be always washing your hands. It would take the skin off."

"Well, well," said the Green Elf. "I was an elf boy once upon a time and I remember that Mother Elf had a sorry time keeping me clean. I was fond of sitting on the ground to talk to the doodle bugs; they are very interesting."

"Oh, tell us about the doodle bug, Little Elf Man," cried Little-Girl, spinning around on one foot until her yellow curls stood straight in the wind.

"Not to-day. It is a long story. But remember about blister beetle. He was once called Tri-ung-u-lin when, as a baby insect, he took a ride on the back of a bee. One branch of the family is called the oil beetle. Uncle Oil Beetle rolls over and draws in his legs and spits oil at you if you touch him. He plays dead and the oil comes out of his joints. Most useful of the grasshoppers' eggs when he is very young and has not yet formed a taste for leaves. The grasshoppers eat the crops, you know, the Garden Manual says so, and any bug that helps destroy them is a Soldier of the School Garden Army. Of course, the blister beetles chew leaves too, and, I dare say, are something of a nuisance, but we have to remember their good deeds in helping get rid of a pest."

And the Elf Man took another heartsease seed, for his throat was dry with so much talking.

"Good-bye, little soldiers, I must turn over and take my siesta, otherwise my afternoon nap." So he rolled over and swung high on the bough in his leaf-bag bed.

As the children went slowly back to the low white house set in the middle of the old garden they heard him snoring a tiny elfin snore.

And the Elf chuckled deep in his chest:

"I know I am doing my best; With such a small voice; I have cause to rejoice That they hear me at all— What woe to be small, So I'll cuddle snug down in my nest, I'll cuddle snug down in my nest." —By Cecilia Reynolds Robertson. (To be continued.)

Juniper Flat, a great level plateau south of The Dalles, which contains something over 100 square miles, has never produced anything but wheat. Now it is springing up in orchards, berry patches and diversified farms. This change, which has converted a near-desert to a veritable garden, is all due to the operations of the Wapinita Irrigation company, which began work here six months ago. Water was brought from the high hills to the east of the plateau and works have now been completed to the point where every farm on the flat can be supplied with abundant water. Juniper Flat is bounded roughly. The principal towns in Juniper Flat are Wapinita, Maupin, Tygh Valley and Wamic. The territory is tributary to The Dalles and is connected with that city by a railroad and stage lines.

Hundreds of tons of hay recently harvested near Harrisburg, Oregon, are lying around and may be lost, all because there is no baling wire to be had in that vicinity for love or money.
